The farmer contended that his stallion-owning business should be treated as entirely separate from his farming business, & that the whole of the expenses & losses connected with his stallions should be set against the revenue derived from them:—Held: it was primarily a question for the comrs. to determine, & no cause had been shown for disturbing their determination.*—*MARSHALL v. 1 i. — Welfare service—Whether admissible deduction.—The taxpayer, a life insurance society, derived income from premiums & from investments & other sources. It sought to deduct from its assessable income expenditure on a "welfare service," which consisted in the voluntary provision by the society of a nursing service for assured persons & in the issue of pamphlets upon matters relating to health, & also expenditure in connection with consultant medical officers who advised the society upon matters relating to its life insurance business & upon information given in the pamphlets issued by it:—Held:

the expenditure was exclusively incurred in gaining the premium income within sect. 20 (5) (a) of Income Tax Assessment Act, 1922–30, & therefore, could not be deducted from the assessable income of the society.—*COLONIAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, LTD. v. 292b. — Loss on individual rents of tied houses—

No loss on aggregate rents.]—A brewery co. owned freehold & leasehold licensed houses, which they let to tenants who were tied to the co. for all the beer, wines, & spirits sold on the premises let to them. Under the decision in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, No. 287, the co., where rent was forgone by reason of the tie, was entitled, in the computation of the profits of the trade for assessment under Sched. D. to income tax, to a deduction of the difference between the Sched. A. assessment of its freehold houses or the rents paid by the co. for its leasehold houses, on the one hand, & the rents received by it from the tied tenants, on the other hand, as an expense wholly incurred for the purposes of its trade. Some of the tied tenants paid premiums, & it was admitted, in the course of the hearing, that they must be taken into account in determining whether rent had been forgone by the co. by reason of the tie. In some cases the co. suffered a loss in respect of rent forgone, but in other cases the rents received by the co. exceeded the annual value or the rent paid by the co., as the case might be. In assessing the co. to income tax under Case I. of Sched. D. the Crown claimed that the amount of such excess should be brought into account under Sched. D., but so far only as was required to wipe out the debit above mentioned, & that for this purpose the whole of the houses must be aggregated:—Held: the claim of the Crown failed, on the ground that the profits & gains arising from the ownership of land, whether used for the purposes of trade or not, were determined exclusively by reference to annual value under Sched. A., & accordingly the rents received could not be included in an account under Sched. D. of the profits & gains of the trade for the purposes of which the land was used.—*HOARE & CO., LTD. v. 292c. — Deficiency in rent—How calculated.]—

A brewery co. had, during the years under assessment, from time to time purchased or acquired leases of licensed houses which it let on yearly tenancies, or for periods of years, to tenants who were tied to the co. for all the beer, wine & spirits sold on the premises so let. The co. had about a thousand such houses. It was not disputed that in computing the profits of its trade for assessment under Sched. D, Case I., the co. was entitled to a deduction of the difference between the rents paid by it for its leasehold houses, or the Sched. A. assessments on its freeholds, & the rents (including the annual equivalent of any premium from the tenant) received by it from the tied tenants. It was now claimed by the co. that, in computing the deficiency of rent in respect of any leasehold licensed house, the following sums, paid or foregone by the co. on its acquisition of the house, should be spread over the period of the lease, & the annual equivalent of each such sum added to the amount which the co. paid in the name of rent: (a) a premium paid by the co. on the grant to it of a lease at a yearly rent; (b) a sum paid on the purchase by the co. of an existing lease; (c) a sum expended by the co. on alterations & improvements in a licensed house under a covenant so to do; & (d) the amount of a debt foregone on the assignment to the co. of a lease of premises in satisfaction of a debt due to the co.:—Held: in computing the deficiency of rent the comparison to be taken was between what the premises would fetch at a rack rent or the annual value, as assessed for the purposes of income tax under Sched. A, whichever is greater, on one side, & the aggregate of the rent paid by the tenant, plus the annual equivalent of any premium paid by the tenant for his lease, on the other; if alterations & repairs made by the brewers added to the value of the premises, such expenditure would be reflected in the rack rent, or in the annual value of the premises; & none of the deductions claimed could be allowed.—COLLYER v. HOARE & CO., LTD. (No. 2), [1938] 1 K. B. 235; [1937] 3 All E. R. 491; 107 L. J. K. B. 1; 158 L. T. 383; 53 T. L. R. 935; 81 Sol. Jo. 750; 21 Tax Cas. 318.

295a. — Mutual Insurance—Surplus from other business done with fire policy holders—Whether liable to tax.]—The main object of applt. co. which was incorporated as a co. limited by guarantee & not having a capital divided into shares, was to enable local authorities & other public bodies by co-operation to insure against fire & other risks on the most favourable terms. Since 1913 the co. had, in addition to the fire insurance business conducted on the mutual system, carried on an extensive business of a miscellaneous character & particularly employers' liability business. Considerable profits were derived from this miscellaneous business, & it was admitted that in general applts. were liable to be assessed to income tax in respect of these profits, but they claimed to be exempt in respect of any surplus arising from employers' liability or other miscellaneous business done with fire policy holders:—Held: as the principle of mutual insurance did not apply either to the employers' liability business or to the miscellaneous business, inasmuch as the fire policy holders in a body had not contributed, the surplus arising from any part of that business must be treated as profit & gains under Sched. D. & chargeable to income tax accordingly.—MUNICIPAL MUTUAL INSURANCE, LTD. v. HILLS (1932), 147 L. T. 62; 48 T. L. R. 301; 16 Tax Cas. 430, H. L.

were admissible deductions in computing the profits made by a member for the purpose of assessment to income tax, as the money was laid out by the respective members on a true insurance principle; (2) the surplus funds of the assocn. were not assessable to income tax, as the assocn. was mere machinery for the purpose of enabling subscribing members to insure themselves.—*THOMAS v. It was contended that a new business of dealing in ships had been begun by the co., & that the £70,000 was a proper deduction in arriving at its profits:—Held: the co. was not carrying on any trade, from the profits of which the £70,000 was an admissible deduction.—*DEVON MUTUAL STEAMSHIP INSURANCE ASSOCN. v. 309a. Loss on investments—What amounts to.—Applts., an insurance co., had investments in British railway stocks, & it was admitted by the Crown that any loss suffered by applts. on such investments was deductible from their profits for purposes of income tax. The result of Railways Act, 1921 (c. 55), was that applts. received in exchange for their various railway holdings stocks in the four amalgamated railway cos. created by that Act. The market value of these new stocks was less than the original cost to applts. of the old stocks, & they claimed that the loss so occasioned to them should be allowed as a deduction from their profits for 1922 & 1923 in computing their income tax liability:—Held: as the effect of what had happened was that the old investments had been closed & realised, & new investments had been begun, applts. were entitled to the deduction claimed.—*ROYAL INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. with theatrical producers; (b) performing for the films; (c) performing on the wireless for the British Broadcasting Corp., & (d) performing for gramophone companies for reproduction on their records:—Held: the actress was assessable under Sched. 313a. Remuneration of solicitor-trustee under trust.—A solr.-trustee was empowered by clauses in the instruments creating the trusts to charge for work done by him in connection with the trusts. By agreement between himself, his co-trustees & the beneficiaries, his remuneration was calculated as a percentage of the annual income of the trust funds, which income had already been brought into charge to tax:—Held: this remuneration was chargeable to income tax against the solr. under 1918 Act, Schedule D, Case II., as his profits or earnings arising from an employment, & was not constituted of annual payments payable wholly out of profits or gains brought into charge to tax within Rules applicable to all Schedules, r. 19.—*JONES v. 313b. —[Appl., who was a practising solr., had, in partnership with other persons, purchased a brickyard & certain land with a view to working the brickyard & developing the property as a building estate. The property was vested in him & another person as trustees. Applt., who at the material times was entitled to a four-ninths share of the proceeds of the adventure, acted as solr. in all matters connected with the property. The costs for such work were paid to applt. by the trustees & were credited in full in the accounts of applt.'s practice. On appeal against the assessment made on him under Sched. D. for the year 1932-33, in respect of his profits as a solr., applt. claimed that, in computing these profits, four-ninths of the costs should be excluded, on the ground that he was, in effect, paying costs as a client to himself as a solr., since four-ninths of the costs were borne by him by way of deduction from his share of the moneys derived from the property. The Special Comrs. decided that the whole of the sum received by applt. from the trustees by way of costs was correctly included in his accounts as a receipt of his profession as a solr., & confirmed the assessment:—Held: the sums received by applt. from the trustees by way of costs were ordinary receipts of his practice as a solr. & he was correctly assessed on that basis.—WATSON & EVERITT v. BLUNDEN (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 402, C. A.

315b. Actress—Profits of foreign tour.—Resp. was an actress who resided in the United Kingdom. During the years 1925-26 to 1927-28, she acted in the United Kingdom in various stage plays, performed for the films & on the wireless, & gave performances for reproduction on gramophone records. She entered into a separate contract in respect of each play & each wireless appearance. In addition, during part of the year 1925-26, she acted in a play in America, the preliminary negotiations for which were made prior to her leaving the United Kingdom, although the actual contract was not made or signed until she arrived in America. The General Comrs. decided, on appeal, that resp. was assessable to income tax under Sched. E. for the years concerned & that the income received in respect of the American employments must be excluded from the assessments:—Held: (1) resp. exercised a profession, in respect of the profits of which she was assessable under Case II. of Sched. D.; (2) (on a supplemental case being stated) resp. carried on one profession only & was assessable for the year 1925-26 in respect of the whole of her earnings therefrom, including the earnings from the American engagement.—*DAVIES v. 317a. Different holdings of War Loan.—Appl., who owned £2,350 5 per cent. War Loan inscribed in the books of the Bank of England, in June, 1924, converted this holding into  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. Conversion Loan, the interest on which was payable under deduction of income tax. Applt., however, continued throughout the year 1925–26 to hold a small amount of 5 per cent. War Loan Post Office issue, to which he had succeeded on the death of his daughter, & which he was not aware he could convert:—Held: applt. continued throughout the year 1925–26 to hold the same source of income, i.e., 5 per cent. War Loan, & under Schedule D, Case III., r. 2, he was assessable to income tax for that year in the full amount of the interest received from such War Loan in the preceding year.—TURTON v. MITCHELL (1927), 138 L. T. 365; 13 Tax Cas. 245.

317b. ————.]—The words “interest . . . on any securities issued under the War Loan Acts, 1914 to 1917,” in 1918 Act, Sched D, Case III., r. 1 (f), designated one taxable subject-matter & not several sources of income.

A taxpayer was the holder of a number of 5 per cent. National War Bonds, 1928 (Third Series). These bonds were on Dec. 1, 1924, converted into 5 per cent. War Loan Stock, 1929–47. The taxpayer in the following year purchased additional 5 per cent. War Loan Stock, 1929–47. Both the 5 per cent. National War Bonds, 1928, & the 5 per cent. War Loan Stock, 1929–47, were securities issued under the War Loan Acts. A question arose whether they were of the same class or source for the purposes of rr. 1 & 2 applicable to Case III. of Sched. D of the Income Tax Act. The taxpayer contended that they were the same source, & therefore the assessment for the year in question should be computed on the basis of the income arising within the year preceding the year of assessment. The Crown, on the other hand, contended that the income arising from 5 per cent. National War Bonds & 5 per cent. War Loan Stock was income arising from different sources, & therefore the assessment for the year in question ought to be computed on the income of the year of assessment:—Held: as both the 5 per cent. National War Bonds, 1928, & the 5 per cent. War Loan Stock, 1929–47, were securities issued under the War Loan Acts, 1914 to 1917, the interest arising from those securities arose from the same source & ought not to be split up for the purpose of charging income tax.—*MERRIFIELD v. 317d. ————]—Shareholder of unlimited company—Deposit—No interest in year of assessment.—Applt. was one of the four shareholders of an unlimited liability co. carrying on the business of bankers, the management being conducted by a “board of partners” consisting of the shareholders. For several years the co. declared dividends, but none of the shareholders drew the whole amount due to him, the excess over what each required being left on deposit with the co. Interest on the sums on deposit was, under a mutual understanding, allowed by the co. & credited to the shareholders quarterly. Applt.'s deposit account was credited with interest for the year ending Mar. 31, 1930. During the year ending Mar. 31, 1931, the “board of partners” resolved, in view of the financial conditions then existing, to forgo interest on their deposit accounts for the time being. No interest on applt.'s deposit was accordingly paid or credited or became due in the year ending Mar. 31, 1931. Applt. was assessed to income tax, under Case III. of Sched. D., for the year 1930–31, on the basis of the amount of deposit interest arising to him within the year preceding. On appeal, he contended that the particular source of profits or income arising to him in the preceding year was the contract whereby interest was payable on the moneys deposited by him with the co. & that, when it was agreed that the payment of interest on the shareholders' deposits should be discontinued, he ceased to possess the particular source of profits or income. The Special Comrs. confirmed the assessment:—Held: the source of profits or income had not ceased in the year of assessment.—CULL v. COWCHER (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 449.

PART V. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.

321a. 1. Surrender of Victory Bonds in payment of death duties.—Applt.'s wife was entitled under the will of her father, who died in May, 1927, to receive, during her lifetime, one-fifth of the income of the residue of his estate. The exors. of the will had deposited, or undertaken to deposit, with the Comrs. of Inland Revenue, certain Victory Bonds with a view to their transfer in payment of death duties. Under sect. 34 of Finance Act, 1917, the exors. received, in satisfaction of the duties payab

(including interest thereon for the period for which payment was postponed), an allowance in respect of the interest which had accrued on these bonds as at the date when the bonds were transferred in payment of the duties. The interest so allowed appeared in the exors.' account of income & expenditure for the period to Dec. 31, 1928, as “Victory Bond interest appropriated against duties” & was shown as reducing the amount of the interest on unpaid death duties entered on the expenditure side of the account. The amount of the residuary income arrived at on this basis was paid to the life tenants, & applt. was assessed to sur-tax for the year 1928–29 in a sum which included, as his wife's share of that income the amount actually paid to her by the exors. as increased by the income tax appropriate thereto. He appealed, contending that, on the authority of the decision in the case of Monks v. Fox's Exors., accrued Victory Bond interest was not assessable to income tax & should be excluded from the exors.' account, & that the residuary income should be computed accordingly. The Special Comrs. decided that the form of account adopted by the exors. was the interest is not subject to income tax.—MONKS v. FOX'S EXECUTORS, [1928] 1 K. B. 351; 97 L. J. K. B. 241; 138 L. T. 203; 44 T. L. R. 115; 72 Sol. Jo. 31; 13 Tax Cas. 171.

321b. Payment to beneficiary out of capital.—To make up deficit of income.—A testator by his will, after bequeathing an annuity to his wife for life as a prior charge upon his estate, directed the surplus income to be divided in equal shares between his wife & his three daughters. He authorised his trustees during the life of his wife to make payments on account of income to the persons for the time being entitled to the income of the trust fund, such payments in advance of income not to exceed a certain sum in respect of each share, but to be made out of money in the hands of the trustees whether representing capital or income & to be charged against income, any payment made out of capital to be recouped so far as practicable as & when the trustees should think fit:—Held: a recipient of payments made under this power on account & in advance of income, but in fact made out of capital, was chargeable in respect thereof to income tax under Sched. D.—WILLIAMSON v. OUGH, [1936] A. C. 384; 105 L. J. K. B. 193; 154 L. T. 524; 80 Sol. Jo. 244; 20 Tax Cas. 194, H. L.

324a. Provision of plant.—Payment in respect of capital.—A colliery co. & an urban district council entered into an agreement for the supply of surplus water from the co.'s collieries to the council, which carried on a water undertaking, on the terms (inter alia), that the co. should erect (according to designs, specifications & tenders previously approved by the council's engineer) such buildings, plant, etc., as were necessary for the pumping, distribution, etc., of the water, & that the council should pay annually to the co. (a) a fixed sum; (b) a sum equal to one-thirtieth of the cost of the works; (c) interest on any portion of such cost for the time being unpaid; & (d) a sum of 1d. per thousand gallons of water supplied. The agreement was to continue in force for thirty years (with an option of renewal to the council subject to a variation of the payments) at the end of which the buildings, plant, etc., were to remain the property of the co., but, in the event of the co. ceasing to work its collieries during the continuance of the agreement, the council were to be allowed to continue pumping the water:—Held: (1) the agreement between the co. & the council in effect provided for two distinct matters, viz., (a) a supply of water at an agreed price, & (b) the construction of the works necessary to provide the supply of water, upon terms that the council should reimburse the co. the cost of these works; (2) the annual payments equal to one-thirtieth of such cost were not part of the payments for the supply of water but were repayments of the capital cost of the works, & were, accordingly, capital receipts not assessable to income tax in the hands of the co., & capital expenditure on the part of the council not admissible as deductions in computing its income tax liability.—BOYCE v. WHITWICK COLLIERY CO., LTD., COALVILLE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BOYCE (1934), 151 L. T. 464; 78 Sol. Jo. 508; 18 Tax Cas. 655, C. A.

328a. Adjustment between local authorities.—On the transfer on the appointed day of the functions of a poor law authority to county & county borough councils under sect. 1 of Local Govt. Act, 1929 (c. 25), the institutional property & liabilities of the authority were also so transferred under sect. 113 (2) (a), (b), & were divided between the councils, & in pursuance of sub-cl. (d), as soon as practicable after the appointed day an adjustment in respect of such properties & liabilities was made between the councils. By an agreement between the said councils, under sect. 113 (2) (d) (ii.), a certain sum on balance became due under the adjustment from the deft. to pltf. council, after valuations, inquiries, etc., on a date later than the appointed day by some sixteen months, which sum included a sum which, under this agreement, was called "interest" calculated as from the appointed day. Deft. council accordingly paid over this amount, which was the aggregate of the two said sums, deducting therefrom income tax on that part of it which represented the "interest":—Held: the latter part was not interest within the Income Tax Acts, but it was an element in the calculation of the capital sum, i.e., the total sum paid over, which had to be made for the purpose of the said adjustment, & that, accordingly, defts. had no right to deduct income tax therefrom.—SOUTHPORT CORPN. v. LANCASHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, [1937] 2 K. B. 589; [1937] 2 All E. R. 626; 106 L. J. K. B. 609; 157 L. T. 63; 101 J. P. 398; 53 T. L. R. 684; 81 Sol. Jo. 460; 35 L. G. R. 268.

328b. Loans by trustees to beneficiary.—Under her husband's will applt. was entitled to a life rent of his whole estate, & the trustees (of whom she was one) were empowered to correct & corresponded to the true nature of the transaction:—Held: only the difference between the interest on death duties & the interest accrued on the Victory Bonds was chargeable against the income of the estate & the amount actually received by applt's wife was income.—MITCHELL v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 108.—IR.

sk. Dividends received by broker.—Deduction of interest on unpaid balance due to broker.—Held: the client was not assessable for income in respect of the whole amount of the dividends received by the broker & credited to his account, but only in respect of the difference between the sum of the dividends & the sum charged for interest.—Re STOUT & TORONTO CITY, [1927] 2 D. L. R. 1100; 60 O. L. R. 313.—CAN.

sl. Dividends paid in Victory Bonds exempt from taxation.—W., Ltd., having accumulated profits, declared a dividend, & by consent of the shareholders, paid the same in Victory Bonds. W., a shareholder, in his income return for that year, claimed he should not pay income tax on this dividend because it was paid in Victory Bonds which were exempt from income tax:—Held: the payment of the distributed dividend in question in this case, in bonds, does not bring the transaction within the "obligation" of the bond in question which introduced the exemption in taxes. Such payment is not the payment of the capital of the bond at maturity nor is it the payment of interest upon presentation & surrender of coupons which is what is exempt from taxation. The amount so received as dividend represented by said bonds was liable to income tax as profits & gains.—WATERHOUSE v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE, [1931] Ex. C. R. 108; affd., [1933] S. C. make advances to her out of capital if they were of opinion that the income of the estate was insufficient for her maintenance & that of a son. For some years the trustees made such advances, which the General Comrs., on appeal, had held to be income in the hands of applt. On May 8, 1934, the trustees & certain prospective beneficiaries under the will signed a minute purporting to empower the trustees to make loans from the trust funds to applt. In respect of each advance thereafter applt. gave a receipt expressing the sum received to be an advance on loan, & at the end of the year she gave to the trustees a personal bond for the total advances made to her during the year. On appeal against an assessment made upon applt. under Sched. D., Case III., in respect of the sums received by her, the General Comrs. decided that the payments purporting to be made under the minute of May 8, 1934, were in reality granted by the trustees & received by applt. for purposes of maintenance under the power in her husband's will & were income in her hands, & they confirmed the assessment:—Held: the General Comrs.' decision was correct. In the circumstances of this case the minute of May 8, 1934, was without legal effect.—ESDALE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1936), 20 Tax Cas. 700.

In each of the five years applts. were called upon to make, & made, payments under their guarantee, the payments varying in amount from year to year according to the sums required by the D. co. in order to pay the 7½ per cent. dividend less tax. Applts. were allowed to deduct the sums so paid as a necessary trading expense, & having been assessed under rule 21 of the All Scheds. Rules in respect of those sums as being "annual payments," appealed against the assessment:—Held: that the payments were "annual payments" within rule 21, & the fact that they were contingent & variable in amount did not affect their character as such; & consequently that they were chargeable to tax.

Per LORD MAUGHAM: The word "annual" in the rule must be taken to have the quality of being recurrent or being capable of recurrence, & in this case the payments had this quality.—*MOSS' EMPIRES, LTD. v. Income Tax Ordinance, 1910, of St. Lucia, only if the interest above mentioned was "income arising & accruing" to them in 1921:—Held: though the interest was a debt accruing in 1921 it was not "income arising or accruing" in 1921, & applts. were not liable under the Ordinance to pay tax for that year; further, applt. not being liable to assessment at all for 1921, it was not material that by sect. 25 of the Ordinance an assessment when entered in the list was to be "final & conclusive."—ST. LUCIA USINES & ESTATES CO., LTD. v. ST. LUCIA (COLONIAL TREASURER), [1924] A. C. 508; 93 L. J. P. C. 212; 131 L. T. 267; 68 Sol. Jo. 456 P. C.—ST. LUCIA.

being testator's expressed intention that the income payable to her should not be less than £4,000 a year. During each of the years 1923-24 to 1929-30 inclusive, the income of the shares & of the specified part of the residuary estate together fell short of £4,000 & the trustees made payments to the widow of varying amounts out of the capital of the estate to make up that sum each year. The trustees' solrs. were informed by an officer of the Inland Revenue that no income tax would be claimed on these payments, but, later, assessments were made on the trustees under General Rule 21 for each of the years 1923-24 to 1929-30 inclusive in respect of the sums paid out of the capital of the estate. On appeal, the trustees claimed (i.) that these sums were not chargeable to income tax, & (ii.) that, in the circumstances of this case, Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 26, & Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 125, did not authorise the making of assessments for years up to & including the year 1928-29, & that such assessments were bad in law. The Special Comrs. decided (a) that the sums paid out of capital constituted an annuity or annual payment within the meaning of r. 21 & fell to be assessed on the appts., & (b) that sect. 125 did not apply to the case:—Held: income tax was payable in respect of the whole of the payment of £4,000 to the widow & the assessments had been correctly made. —*BRODIE v. 349b. — Discretion to trustees in family arrangement.—The trustees under a will were directed, on the death of testator's widow, which occurred in 1909, to hold in trust one-half of the residuary estate & to pay the income thereof to his daughter for her life without power of anticipation &, on her death, for her children in equal shares. The income from the daughter's moiety proved insufficient for the maintenance of herself & her home, & by a deed of family arrangement executed in 1925, in which the daughter & all her children joined, the trustees were authorised to supplement the income of the daughter arising from the trust funds by payment to her out of the capital of the fund of such sums as the trustees in their absolute discretions thought necessary & proper for the maintenance of herself & her home. During each of the years 1925-26 to 1929-30 inclusive the trustees paid the daughter sums out of the corpus of the trust fund in addition to the income of the fund, while they also paid for her the rates, taxes, etc., on her house & other household expenses. On appeal against assessments made under General Rule 21 for these years on the amounts paid by the trustees out of the corpus of the fund, the Special Comrs. decided that the payments were income & not capital payments, & that they were not voluntary allowances:—Held: the payments were taxable income of the recipient. —*LINDUS & HORTIN v. so. Mortgage accepted in discharge of principal & interest under earlier mortgage.—When a mtge. has been accepted in discharge of the principal & interest due under an earlier mtge. & the mtgee.'s books of account have not treated the interest as being thereby paid, the interest does not become a profit or gain assessable to income tax until the mtge. is realised. If the mortgaged property is sold under a mtge. decree, & is purchased by the mtgee., then so far as the purchase-price exceeds the principal sums advanced there is a realisation, & therefore payment, of the interest. In assessing the profit so arising sums paid by the mtgee. in respect of claims upon the mortgaged property which he knew of when he purchased are not permissible deductions from the purchase-price. The purchase-price can properly be taken as the value of the property, although the valuation by the civil ct. for the purpose of the sale proclamation is lower.—RAGHUNANDAN PRASAD SINGH v. INCOME TAX COMRS. (1933), L. R. 60 Ind. App. 133, P. C.—

At the end of the tax year she obtained a certificate that tax had been deducted & claimed repayment of the tax. The payments had in fact been allowed as deductions against the income of the divorced husband, being treated as a charge on his income:—Held: resp. was entitled to the repayment claimed.—*SPILSBURY v. 367a. — Agreement to pay super-tax on wife's income in excess of specified sum—Whether husband entitled to marshal wife's income.]—A husband & wife lived apart upon the terms of a separation deed by which the husband covenanted during the joint lives of himself & his wife to pay to trustees for the benefit of the wife such a sum in each year as, after deducting income tax at the current rate, should amount to the sum of £3,000. Clause 11 of the deed was in these terms: "In addition to all other payments by this indenture agreed to be made by the husband or his representatives after his decease he or they shall pay & discharge all super-tax which shall be payable in respect of the income of either the husband or the wife except any super-tax in respect of any income of the wife not coming to her under or by virtue of this indenture in excess of £1,400 for any year." Apart from the deed the wife had an income exceeding £1,400 a year:—Held: in computing the super-tax payable by the husband in respect of the income of the wife, the husband was not entitled to marshal the component parts of the wife's income so that one part, namely, the annual amount payable under the deed plus £1,400, should be exempt from super-tax as to £2,000 thereof, & as to the balance should bear the lower rates of tax, & that the higher rate of tax should fall upon another part, namely, the excess of the wife's total income over the first-mentioned part; but clause 11 of the deed required that the whole super-tax payable in respect of the total income of the wife should be divided in the proportion which the amount of one of the above-mentioned parts of the wife's income bore to the amount of the other, & that the husband should pay super-tax in the proportion which the first-mentioned part bore to that secondly mentioned.—*FLEETWOOD-HESKETH v. 369c. Payment of interest to debenture holders—Out of accumulated profits.]—The words "profits or gains brought into charge to tax" in rr. 19 & 20 of the All Schedules Rules to 1918 Act, mean profits or gains brought into charge to tax in the same year of assessment as the payment is made of the interest from which income tax is deducted.

A trading co. wrote off against capital depreciation a balance of £68,929 standing to the credit of its profit & loss account & representing accumulated past profits on which the co. had paid income tax in previous years. During years of charge the co. made no profits, but it paid debenture interest, deducting from the payments tax at the standard rate which is claimed to retain on the ground that the £68,929 was to be regarded as available for the payment of the interest, & that the interest was, therefore, "payable wholly out of profits or gains brought into charge to tax" within r. 19 of the All Schedules Rules under 1918 Act:—Held: as during each of the years of charge the co. had no profits or gains brought into charge to income tax, the interest had not been paid out of money already brought into tax within r. 19. The case, therefore, did not fall within r. 19, but within r. 21, by which the co. must account to the Crown for the amount of the tax which it had deducted.—*LUIPAARD'S VLEI ESTATE & GOLD MINING CO., LTD. v. 369d. — Whether payable out of capital.]—A co., as empowered by a private Act of 1930, raised £850,000 by an issue of debenture stock. By sect. 118 of the private Act, the co. was allowed to charge to capital account the interest accruing till 1935 on money so raised. Interest, subject to deduction of income tax, was duly paid partly out of capital & was so debited in the co.'s accounts. An assessment to income tax was made in respect of the said interest on the ground that it had not been paid out of profits brought into charge to income tax. The co. maintained that it was entitled to retain as its own the tax deducted from the interest on the ground that, as there was income in its hands already subjected to tax which it could have used to pay the interest, the payment of interest debited to capital in the co.'s accounts ought to be treated as having been paid out of taxed profits:—Held: as the debiting of the interest to capital was not merely a matter of accounting, but a deliberate decision by the co. to charge the interest in question against capital & not against income, the co. was not entitled to retain the tax deducted.—*CENTRAL LONDON RY. 373a. Interest on sums omitted from accounts by trustees.]—An infant was entitled under two wills to funds on attaining his majority. On an account being taken the trustees were found to have made serious errors. The cestui que trust issued a writ claiming an account & other relief but not alleging fraud or breach of trust. A consent order was made containing (inter alia) an admission by deft. trustees that they were chargeable with compound interest on all moneys due to pltf. The taking of the account was referred to accountants & a special referee, who drew up a detailed award in which certain sums were shown as interest. The Comrs. sought to assess these sums to super tax. The cestui que trust appealed to the Special Comrs. on the ground that the whole amount of the award was capital. The Special Comrs. found, in his favour, that the sums which had been calculated on an interest basis were interest in the nature of damages or compensation, & not interest within the Income Tax Acts. On appeal to the High Ct., the learned judge reversed this decision, & the cestui que trust appealed:—Held: (1) there was an allocation by the special referee of a sum calculated on an interest basis; (2) as there had been no breach of trust & the parties had consented to the order of the ct., this sum was interest payable not by way of damages or compensation, but under a contract & therefore liable to tax.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 378a. ————.]—By a mtgee. & two further charges a mtgee. lent £25,500 on the security of a reversionary interest. Clause 5 (B) of the mtge. (which also applied to the further charges) provided that in case before the falling into possession of the reversion any interest on the principal money or on any accumulations of interest arising under that provision & added to the principal money should not be paid within thirty days of the due date then the sum due in respect of the half-year's interest so unpaid should become principal money as from the day on which it became due & be added to the principal money & should carry interest at the same rate as that applicable to the principal money, "but so that all interest unpaid on the original principal sum hereby secured & on all sums converted into principal money . . . shall become accumulated in the way of compound interest with half-yearly rests." Sums were so added to the principal money amounting to £2,378 & these sums were always net interest after deduction of income tax. The mtgee. then sold the reversion under his power of sale but left £25,500 on mtge. to the purchaser. The mtgee.'s solrs. received the balance of the purchase-money amounting to about £3,000 & paid thereout the sum of £2,378, & a sum of interest thereon as to which no question arose, to the mtgor. & paid the balance to a second mtgee. An assessment to income tax was made on the solrs. to the extent of a sum arrived at by grossing up the net sum representing interest & deducting therefrom the mtgor.'s taxed income for the relevant years, & the Crown claimed to recover income tax on the sum so assessed as being a payment of interest not made out of profits or gains brought into charge within rule 21 of the All Scheds. Rules to the Income Tax Act, 1918, as amended. LAWRENCE, J., affirmed a decision of the Comrs. discharging the assessment & in so doing purported to follow Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Holder, [1932] A. C. 624; Earl of Carnarvon v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 455, & Marland v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 467, in holding that the interest on the mtge. must be treated as having been paid half-yearly out of money advanced by the mtgee. The Ct. of Appeal held that it was impossible so to hold, as Holder's case was distinguishable & did not justify SINGLETON, J.'s decision in Earl of Carnarvon v. Inland Revenue Comrs., while Marland's case was wrongly decided, but dismissed the appeal on the ground that, as at each half-year the net interest only was added to the principal money & accepted by the mtgee. in full satisfaction for the interest, the solrs., when they paid the mtgee. out of purchase-money the sum so added to the principal money, were not making a payment of interest within the rule. They were paying a sum that had already suffered tax by deduction & were under no liability to make any further deduction.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LAWRENCE, GRAHAM & Co., [1937] 2 K. 380a. Instalments paid after death of moneylender —Instalments not representing capital.]—A moneylender made loans on promissory notes which provided for payment to him of monthly or more frequent instalments. Up to the date of his death he was assessed under Case I, Sched. D, in respect of the profits of this business, all instalments due & paid prior to his death being brought into the relative computations. Instalments falling due after his death were collected by the administrator of his estate but it was not suggested that the administrator was at any time carrying on any trade. Assessments were made on the administrator on the basis that so much of the instalments collected by him as did not represent repayment of capital was "interest of money" within rule 1, Case III., Sched. D. The administrator contended that the sums in question were not assessable as "interest of money" within Income Tax Acts:—Held: the sums in question were "interest" assessable under Case III.—BENNETT v. OGSTON (1930), 15 Tax Cas. 374.

380b. Interest payable abroad—By executors resident in England.—A sum of money was advanced, on terms embodied in an agreement made in the United Kingdom, by K., who was resident in Kenya & was not resident in the United Kingdom, to B., who was resident both in Kenya & the United Kingdom. The loan was made to enable B. to buy all the shares & debentures in an English limited co. As security B. deposited with K. in Kenya the documents of title to a farm in Kenya & all his share certificates in the co. Interest was payable half-yearly in sterling in East Africa. B. died in 1928. His exors., resps., who were resident in the United Kingdom, obtained probate of his will in England & appointed attorneys in Kenya to one of whom letters of administration with the will annexed were granted by the Supreme Ct. in Nairobi. Four payments of interest were made to K. during the material period; the first two were made to him personally in London by resps. without deduction of tax, & the remaining two, paid under deduction of tax, were sent to Barclays Bank in London on behalf of resps., with instructions to pay the sums to K. through a branch of the bank in Nairobi. Assessments were raised upon resps. under General Rule 21 for the years 1928-29, 1929-30 & 1930-31 in respect of the interest payments in question. On appeal the Special Comrs. decided that during B.'s lifetime the debt would be regarded as situate in Kenya & the interest as arising there, & that, although resps. became the debtors for the interest on his death, the mere accident of their residence in the United Kingdom should not be regarded as changing what was foreign into British property, & they discharged the assessments:—Held: (1) the interest payments in question were made by resps. who were resident in the United Kingdom out of sources in the United Kingdom, & they were accordingly assessable upon resps. under General Rule 21; (2) on a point of "discovery" by reference to sect. 125, 1918 Act, the assessments had been validly made.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BROOME'S (VISCOUNT) EXORS. (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 667.

391a. Payments in respect of user of patents.—A French firm, which had acquired from an American owner of patent rights the sole right of manufacture & sale, in the "eastern hemisphere," of certain machinery, entered into an arrangement with applt. co. under which the co. was appointed as the agent of the firm for the manufacture & sale of the machinery in the parts of the British Empire within this area, which included the United Kingdom. The terms of this arrangement were agreed verbally in Paris, were subsequently embodied in a letter, written in Paris, from the firm to the co. & were accepted by the co. by a letter written in England. Under the arrangement, the selling price of the machinery was to be fixed by applt. co. whose manufacturing costs, plus overhead charges plus profit, were not to exceed certain specified percentages of the sales. Payments due by applt. co. to the French firm under the arrangement were in fact made direct to the American owner of the patent rights, the amounts due by the co. to the firm being the same as the amounts due by the firm to the American owner. The machines which formed the subject of the patent rights were manufactured in England & sold by the co. The co. appealed to the Special Comrs. against assessments made upon it under r. 21 of the General Rules, as amended by Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 26, to cover the payments under the arrangement, contending that the agreement between the French firm & the co. was made in France & that the payments under that agreement were not income arising from property in the United Kingdom:—Held: the payments under the agreement constituted income arising from property within the United Kingdom & were chargeable to income tax.—INTERNATIONAL COMBUSTION, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 532.

391b. Lump sum payment.—Resp. co. entered into an agreement with a French author, whose usual place of abode was not within the United Kingdom, under which it acquired the exclusive right of translation & publication in the English language of a book written in French, & agreed to pay the sum of 500,000 French francs for the right to sell 28,000 copies of the best edition of the book. The agreement provided for annual payments to the author, at a proportionate rate, for copies of the best edition sold in excess of 28,000 & for a royalty of 10 per cent. on the published price of all copies of any cheaper edition. Only 7,000 copies of the book were, in fact, sold & resp. co. was assessed to income tax under sect. 26 of Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), as extended by sect. 25 of the same Act, in respect of the sum of 500,000 francs payable under the agreement:—Held: the payment was a payment of or on account of royalties.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LONGMANS GREEN & CO., LTD. (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 272.

391c. Assessment on person through whom payment made—Not limited to agent of recipient.—B. was proposing to form a co. for producing in London an English version of a play by a French author resident in Paris. By a memorandum of agreement between the author & B. the author granted to B. a licence to make an adaptation of the play in the English language & to produce it in London & elsewhere, & B. agreed to pay the author on signing the agreement the sum of £300 in advance & on account of royalties. In pursuance of the agreement B. instructed a firm of solrs. to pay the author out of money in their hands, of which he had the disposal, £300 on account of royalties, & they made the payment by their cheque for that amount, which was cashed in due course:—Held: the solrs. were persons "by or through whom" payment was made of royalties in respect of copyright within rule 21 of All Schedules Rules, as amended by Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), ss. 25, 26, so as to apply to cases where the usual place of abode of the owner of the copyright is not within the United Kingdom.—RYE & EYRE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1935] A. C. 274; 104 L. J. K. B. 401; 152 L. T. 493; 51 T. L. R. 318; 19 Tax Cas. 164, H. L.

391d. Payment without deduction under separation agreement—Set-off.—A separation agreement made in Aug. 1926, between a husband & wife provided that the husband should pay to the wife a specified weekly sum. The husband from time to time paid to the wife sums payable under the agreement without deducting the income tax thereon. In May, 1935, the wife brought an action against the husband claiming a sum as money remaining due to her under the agreement. It appeared that during the period from Aug. 1926, when the payments began, down to Aug. 1932, the husband had paid sums which were in the aggregate substantially equal in amount to those payable under the agreement for that period; but that during the subsequent period from Aug. 1932, to the date of the action he had paid in each year sums which were considerably less than were payable in that year under the agreement. The husband contended by way of defence that he would have been entitled under 1918 Act, General Rules applicable to All Scheds., r. 19 (1), to deduct from each & all of the payments made by him income tax thereon at the current rate, leaving his wife to recover the amount of the tax from the income tax authorities, that as he had not deducted any of that tax he had overpaid his wife by the full amount thereof, & that as that amount exceeded the sum claimed by the wife she could recover nothing in the action:—Held: although the sums payable under the agreement were payable weekly, yet, as they might continue for longer than a year, they were, within the meaning of rule 19 (1), an "annual payment," from which, in so far as it remained unpaid, the husband was entitled to deduct income tax "on making such payment," & on receipt of the "residue" of which the wife should allow the deduction, that as the husband had made the annual payment in full for each year down to 1932 he was no longer entitled to deduct tax in respect of these years, but that as he had not made that payment in full for any of the remaining years down to the time of the action & a residue remained payable in respect of these years he was entitled on making payment of that residue to deduct from his wife's claim thereto the amount of the tax thereon.—*TAYLOR v. The loan interest was due & was paid out of the borough fund before the subsidy was received. The total taxed income of the corp'n. was sufficient to cover the whole of the loan interest payable.

The corp'n. was assessed under Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 26, on the same footing as in Birmingham Corp'n. v. I. R. Comrs., No. 393b, & the assessment was upheld by the special comrs. on appeal. 393b. —[J]—The Birmingham Corp'n. undertook a Housing Scheme, under the provisions of the Town Planning Act, 1919 (c. 35), & under the provisions of sect. 7, the Local Govt. Board undertook to, & did, refund to them, by means of an Exchequer subsidy, the loss thereby incurred. In order to finance the scheme, the corp'n. issued housing bonds, & when paying interest upon them they deducted income tax. They alleged that that interest was paid out of their general borough fund, which was used in financing their markets, gas, electricity, tramways & other undertakings, & that as the income in respect of that fund & those undertakings had already been brought into charge for income tax purposes, they were entitled to retain the amounts deducted:—Held: as the corp'n. had an indemnity against loss on the housing scheme the interest so paid could not be regarded as a general payment out of profits brought into charge, & the corp'n. must account to the Revenue for the tax so deducted under rule 21 of the rules applicable to all Schedules.—*BIRMINGHAM CORPN. v. 394a. —[J]—The profits of the Metropolitan Water Board were assessable under 1918 Act, Schedule A., No. III., r. 3, by reference to the profits of the year preceding the year of assessment. The accounts of the Board for the year ending Mar. 31, 1922, showed a loss, & no assessment was made for the year ending Apr. 5, 1923. The accounts for the year ending Mar. 31, 1923, showed a profit of over two millions, out of which the Board paid over one million interest on water stock, & debentures, deducting & retaining the income tax thereon. On an information claiming that the Board was liable to account for the amount of the tax so deducted, the Board contended that the interest paid for the year 1922-23 was payable out of profits brought into charge for 1922-23 within Rules applicable to all Schedules, r. 19, & was in fact paid out of the profits for 1922-23, & that, although the income tax for 1922-23 was to be measured by the profits of the preceding year, the profits for 1922-23 had been brought into charge, & rule 21 did not apply:—Held: as the Board had been assessed at zero under Schedule A for 1922-23, the interest had not been paid out of profits brought into charge, & the Crown was entitled to succeed.—*A.-G. v. At a later date further sums were paid up in advance of calls in pursuance of an offer by the co. to pay interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum free of income tax. The co. regularly paid the interest on these advances, without deducting income tax:—Held: (1) as regards the payments at the rate of 6 per cent. the ct. could not presume that the co. had entered into a new contract with shareholders making such advances to pay those shareholders interest at such a rate as after deduction of tax thereon would yield a clear 6 per cent.; (2) as regards the payments made at the rate of 4 per cent. the contract could not be construed as a contract to pay interest at such a rate as after deducting income tax would leave a clear 4 per cent., & the agreement to pay interest free of income tax was void under rule 23 (2) of the All Scheds. 425a. — Gifts made in United Kingdom.—Mrs. T., who died on Feb. 1, 1933, was a beneficiary under the will of a testator who gave two-eighths of his residuary estate to a Trust Co. of New York upon trust for investment & to collect the income thereof & after deducting legal charges & commission to accumulate the income until Mrs. T. attained the age of twenty-one years & afterwards upon trust to collect the income of the two-eighth shares & the accumulations & after deducting lawful charges & commissions to apply the net income quarterly or as often as the same should from time to time accrue to the use of Mrs. T. as long as she lived. The trusts of the will fell to be administered under the law of the State of New York, under which the whole estate in law & equity in the trust funds was vested in the Trust Co. & the trust gave the beneficiary merely the right to resort to a ct. of equity to compel the Trust Co. to discharge the task imposed upon it. Accordingly, following Archer-Shee v. Garland, [1931] A. C. 212, the assessments on Mrs. T.'s income were made as regards this property under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D., in respect of only the amounts of income received in or remitted to the United Kingdom. Mrs. T. from time to time directed the Trust Co. to pay certain allowances to her children. These allowances were all remitted to England either to the children or their bankers & were included in the assessments to income tax made upon Mrs. T. for the years 1924–25 to 1926–27 inclusive. On an appeal by her exors. against the assessments:—Held: the drafts sent to the United Kingdom in respect of the allowances did not become the children's property until they had been cashed &, although Mrs. T. could not be said to have received the payments, she was "entitled" to the income when it reached England & was therefore assessable to income tax in respect of it under rule 1 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to Sched. D. when read in connection with rule 2 of the Rules applicable to Case V. of Sched. D.—TIMPSON'S EXECUTORS v. YERBURY, [1936] 1 K. B. 645; [1936] 1 All E. R. 180; 105 L. J. K. B. 749; 154 L. During her visit resp. received certain sums arising from shares in the United States. Resps. acquired a residence in England in 1929 :—Held : under Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 29, resp. was properly assessable for income tax in respect of the year 1929 on the sums received in 1928.

(2) Resp. had for some years paid to her daughter in England a monthly allowance. This allowance was paid by the purchase by resp.'s agent on resp.'s banking account in the United States of a banker's draft on a London bank, which was posted to the daughter & payable to her order. Evidence was given that by the law of California, the gift of the allowance was complete at the very latest at the time of the posting of the banker's draft in California :—Held : inasmuch as the gift of the sums paid as allowance was complete outside the United Kingdom, the sums were not sums which resp. received or was entitled to receive within Sched. From the outbreak of war in 1914 K. ceased to operate the account & he died in 1916. The bank, however, continued to credit the account with the interest & dividends until 1917, when the German Govt. appointed a custodian to take over & administer enemies' property in Germany, & the bank then paid the interest & dividends to the custodian. K.'s last surviving exor. died in 1921, & resps., the exors. of such survivor, recovered the interest & dividends, together with interest thereon, through the Anglo-German Mixed Arbitral Tribunal. Resps. were assessed to income tax in respect of these sums for the years 1922-23 to 1926-27 under Cases IV. & V. of Sched. D. on the ground that they were income arising to resps. in those years as they accrued only when received under the decree of the Tribunal :—Held : the dividends & interest accrued in the years when they were paid into the bank, & it was now too late to make assessments in respect of the years before K.'s death, & as to the years after his death assessments could be made only so far as the assessments were in time, & the further sum paid as interest thereon under the decree of the Tribunal was not income but was compensation comparable to damages for detention of a chattel & therefore was not assessable to income tax.—*SIMPSON v. 428c. ———.—Suspension of interest—Issue of funding bonds.—Resp. co. was the holder of certain gold bearer bonds of the United States of Brazil. The Brazilian Govt., being unable to pay the interest as it fell due, put forward a funding plan, under which holders might exchange their interest coupons as they fell due for twenty-year funding bonds, carrying interest at 5 per cent. Resp. co. from time to time sold the funding bonds which they had received. For the years 1933-34 & 1934-35 resp. co. were assessed to income tax under Case IV. of Sched. D in sums intended to represent the value as at the dates of issue of certain of the funding bonds received & sold by them. The claim for tax having been rejected by FINLAY, J., the Crown appealed. The question for the determination of the ct. was, were the funding bonds when received, "income arising from securities out of the United Kingdom" within Case IV. of Sched. D of 1918 Act. It was contended on behalf of the Crown that they were money's worth received in satisfaction of interest payable under the original bonds. Resp. co. contested this & contended that they had received no income from bonds, in that all they had received was a substituted promise to pay the interest at a future date with interest thereon in the meantime :—Held : where a debtor defaults & the appropriate income being money is not changed into something else but remains money which the debtor promises to pay at a later date, it cannot be said that the security has produced any income. The form of the funding bond was nothing but a promise to pay at a future date the interest in respect of which default had been made. Resp. co. was not therefore assessable to income tax under Case IV. of Sched. D of 1918 Act in respect thereof.—CROSS v. LONDON & PROVINCIAL TRUST, LTD., [1938] 1 K. B. 792; [1938] 1 All E. 430b. — Company making investments on real estate abroad.]—A co. incorporated in the United Kingdom, & carrying on business there at its head office in the making of loans of money upon the security of land in Egypt, was assessed to income tax until Apr. 1, 1922, under Schedule D., Case I., upon the profits of the co.'s business. As from Apr. 1, 1922, the entire control of the business was removed to Egypt. The trade of the co. wholly consisted of the lending of money to approved borrowers in Egypt in accordance with Egyptian law, at rates of interest varying from 6 to 8½ per cent. No loans were entertained without good real security being given, & in the event of the borrower's default, proceedings were invariably taken in the local cts. to realise the security, & if it could not be sold immediately, the co. would go into possession:—Held: as from Apr. 1, 1922, the co., though it carried on a trade or business, was properly assessed to income tax under Schedule D., Case IV., in respect of income arising from securities in a place out of the United Kingdom, & was to be taxed in the full amount of such income, whether it was remitted to the United Kingdom or not. There was no evidence upon which the comrs. could find, as they had, that the taking of securities for the loans advanced was only "an incident" in such business; on the contrary it was an indispensable condition of the business. The case being one coming both under Case IV. & Case V. the Crown had an option to tax the co. under either case.—

432 i. Deductions—Tax paid in foreign country—Income not chargeable in United Kingdom.]—A British investment co. was chargeable to income tax in America, where its income arose. The income on which it was chargeable in America included profits on the realisation of investments, which profits are not chargeable to income tax in the United Kingdom. In computing its income from securities abroad under Sched. D, Case IV., the co. claimed a deduction in respect of the income tax paid in America on profits from the realisation of investments there:—Held: the deduction claimed was inadmissible, on the ground that, under rule 1 of Case IV., a deduction in respect of foreign income tax was allowable only with regard to income which was chargeable to income tax in the United Kingdom.—*SCOTTISH AMERICAN INVESTMENT CO. v. material periods. No particulars were furnished of the income arising from his possessions in Ceylon but it was not denied that it was substantial in amount, & it was not suggested that the reductions shown from time to time in the debit balances in the agents' books were not the result of receipts on revenue account. On appeal against assessments under Case V. of Sched. D. for the years 1927–28 & 1930–31, based on the amounts remitted to the United Kingdom in those years, applt. contended that these amounts were advances of capital or loans made by his agents, & that it was not material from what source the advances were repaid. The Special Comrs. held that the mere fact that applt.'s accounts with his agents & his bank in Ceylon were overdrawn at the time when the remittances were made was not sufficient to show that such remittances were capital, & they concluded on the information before them that the sums received by him from Ceylon were income arising from his possessions there:—Held: the Special Comrs. were entitled on the evidence before them to hold that the sums received by applt. from Ceylon were remittances of income & were accordingly assessable under Case V. of Sched. - 441a. ——— Application of American law.—Testator, a subject of the United States, directed that his residuary estate should be held upon trust to dispose of the income thereof to the use of his daughter, now the wife of applt., during her life. Testator's residuary estate consisted wholly of foreign securities & foreign stocks & shares, & the existing trustees were an American trust co. Applt. appealed against assessments to income tax made upon him in respect of his wife's income arising from the will under Case IV. & Case V., r. 1, as being income arising from foreign securities, stocks & shares, & chargeable to tax, whether received in the United Kingdom or not, & claimed that, by reason of the interposition of the title of the trustees, it should be assessed under Case V., r. 2, as being a foreign possession other than stocks & shares & chargeable only to the extent to which it was remitted to the United Kingdom. The assessments were ultimately upheld by the House of Lords upon the assumption that the American law was the same as the law of England. Upon an appeal by applt. against further assessments to income tax made upon him in respect of the same income for the three succeeding years, expert evidence was adduced as to the law of the United States to the effect that under that law the wife had no estate or interest in the securities, stocks or shares, but that her sole right was to compel the trustees to discharge their duties under the will:—Held: as the result of this evidence, the income in question was assessable under Case V., r. 2.—*ARCHER-SHEE v. 446f. _____.]—Resp.'s wife, who lived with her husband in London, was entitled to a share of the profits of a business carried on in Colombo. Her share was paid into her current account with the Colombo branch of a bank which was registered in the United Kingdom & had its head office in London. On her instructions these profits were invested in Indian bonds. Resp.'s wife had from time to time borrowed certain sums from the bank in London on the security of the bonds. On Apr. 1, 1930, she requested the bank in London to instruct its Colombo branch to sell sufficient securities to extinguish the loan. On the next day the bank informed her that the amount of her loan account, with interest, was being debited to the Colombo branch which was being instructed to realise securities to pay it off. The transfer was effected by cross entries in the books of the two offices, the entry in the London books being dated April 3, 1930. A small credit balance in Colombo was thereupon converted into an overdraft on which interest was chargeable. A few weeks afterwards the overdraft & the interest accrued thereon were discharged in Colombo out of the proceeds of the sale of Indian bonds. Resp. had been assessed under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D. for the year 1931-32 in respect of the amount of the overdraft transferred from the London office of the bank to the Colombo branch on the footing that when the proceeds of sale of the bonds were credited to the Colombo account the debt due to the bank from resp.'s wife was extinguished & this constituted the receipt by her in the United Kingdom of a taxable remittance, but this assessment was discharged following a decision of the High Ct. on a case stated between the same parties. Resp. was then assessed under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D. for the years 1927-28 to 1932-33 inclusive on the basis, as regards assessments for years other than 1930-31, that income from foreign possessions was received by his wife in the United Kingdom as & when the advances were made to her in London by the London bank, & as regards the assessment for the year 1930-31, on the alternative basis, that income from foreign possessions was received by her in the United Kingdom when the loan was transferred as at Apr. 3, 1930, from her London account to her account at the Colombo branch. On appeal the Special Comrs. discharged all the assessments:—Held: neither the loans made from time to time by the bank in London to resp.'s wife nor the transfer of the loan as at Apr. 3, 1930, from the bank in London to the Colombo branch constituted the receipt by her in the United Kingdom of income from foreign possessions within rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D.—HALL v. MARIANS (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 582, C. A.

446g. — Remittances from sources already taxed.—The Duchess of Roxburghe, who was resident in the United Kingdom, was entitled to receive income from America (a) from a share in the trust estate of her father, the income from which was assessable under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D. by reference to the amounts remitted to the United Kingdom, & (b) from securities, stocks, shares & rents in her absolute ownership, the income from which was assessable under Case IV. & rule 1 of Case V. of Sched. D. on the basis of the amounts arising in America. The Duchess had in New York several accounts with the same bank, of which one dealt with income & capital receipts & payments without distinction, a second, known as the "Special Custodian Account," was opened in Nov. 1930, by a substantial credit from the first account, & a third was a time deposit account opened in Mar. 1931, by a transfer from the second account of $300,000 representing capital & income which had already borne British income tax. The money in the third account was not deposited for any fixed period but was at the control of the Duchess, & the rate of interest depended partly on the length of time the deposit remained; the interest thereon was transferred, as it accrued, to the second account. On Aug. 23, 1931, the Duchess instructed her bank to remit to London a certain sum to be debited to the "Special Custodian Account" (which, it appeared, her advisers—though not the bank—regarded as including the amount on time deposit) & "to be provided out of accumulations of income other than income from the Goelet Trust of my Father." In fact, however, the bank left the amount on time deposit untouched & made the remittance of $200,763 on Sept. 4, 1931, out of the second account, whose credit balance at that date consisted of an amount transferred from the first account, certain income from the trust estate, a tax refund from the United States Treasury, small sums of interest, & the proceeds of sale of stock (originally purchased out of income) which was realised to make up the balance of the remittance. It was agreed that $31,112 of this remittance represented income already charged to income tax in the United Kingdom. On appeal to the Special Comrs. against an assessment under Case V. of Sched. D. for the year 1932–33 in respect of the amount so remitted, applts. (as exors. of the Duke, who died in Sept. 1932) contended (inter alia) (1) that it was open to the Duchess to remit income from whatever source she saw fit & that the remittance made in Sept. 1931, following her instructions must be deemed to have been made from sources available already taxed or from capital, (2) that the manner in which the accounts were dealt with by the bank was not conclusive of the matter, & that the remittance was made out of capital & income already taxed, of which there was a sufficient amount available in the bank's hands, & (3) that there was no evidence upon which the Special Comrs. could competently find that the remittance in question was derived from income from foreign possessions. The Special Comrs. found as a fact that the money (i.e., the $300,000) remained on time deposit & was not available to meet the remittance in question, & that accordingly the moneys remitted were, with the exception of $31,112, income from foreign possessions assessable under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D., & they confirmed the assessment:—Held: the remittance in question must be taken to have consisted of capital & income from foreign securities already subjected to tax in Great Britain.—ROXBURGHE'S (DUKE) EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1936), 20 Tax Cas. 711.

446h. — Proceeds of sale of foreign investments—Remitted to United Kingdom.—Resp., a widow, was a citizen of the United States of America, but had in 1925 purchased a house in this country in which she had since resided. She was possessed of certain American securities, stocks & shares, which she had deposited for safe custody at a bank in New York. In the years 1932 & 1933 she caused certain of these securities, stocks & shares to be sold in America & the proceeds remitted to her in this country. Estimated assessments to income tax were made upon her for £5,000 for each of the two years 1932 & 1933 under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D. On appeal by resp. the Special Comrs. found that the proper inference to be drawn from the facts of the case was that the actual sums remitted to resp. were all derived from the proceeds of the realisation of investments owned by her before 1925 & not from income, or the proceeds of the realisation of investments acquired out of income arising since that date, & that she was not resident in the United Kingdom before 1925. They accordingly discharged the assessments. On appeal by the Crown it was contended that under rule 2 of Case V. of Sched. D., the measure of liability to income tax in respect of income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom was the full amount of the actual sums received in the United Kingdom:—Held: the opening words of Sched. D. & of Cases IV. & V. of that Sched. showed that the purpose of rule 2 of Case V. was to deal only with the income which accrued from possessions out of the United Kingdom to the person to be charged & which was remitted to this country. Rule 2 was part of the machinery for carrying out that purpose, & must be read as if the words "of income" were inserted after the word "sums" in that rule.—KNEEN v. MARTIN, [1935] 1 K. He resided in England & his duties under his employment, the terms of which were not contained in any written agreement, were to supervise the sales of the products of the American co. in all countries except U.S.A. & Canada, whether sold direct by them or through agents or subsidiary cos. His place of employment was at the office of the American co. in Ohio & he was paid from that place, & at his request payment was made to his credit in a banking account in Canada. Part of his work was done in England:—Held: as the agreement for employment under which his salary was payable & the actual payment were made outside the United Kingdom, M. was only assessable in respect of the income arising from his employment under Case V. as being "income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom" & therefore by virtue of rule 2 of the Rules applicable to Case V. his assessment must be on so much only of that income as was remitted to this country.—*BENNETT v. 457a. Director's commission on underwriting shares.—Applt., a co. director, received commission from a syndicate for underwriting shares in a new co., & he was assessed to income tax under Schedule D. for the year 1919–20 in respect of the commission. He was not concerned in any other underwriting transaction in 1919, 1920 & 1921 :—Held : the commission was an annual profit or gain within Schedule D., Case VI., & applt. had been properly assessed to income tax in respect of such commission.—LYONS v. The overdraft was, in fact, paid off within a year & the bonus of £1,000 was paid to the guarantors in equal shares. Applt. was assessed to income tax under Case VI. of Sched. D. in respect of his share & the Special Comrs., on appeal, confirmed the assessment :—Held : the assessment appealed against was correctly made.—SHERWIN v. BARNES (1931), 16 Tax Cas. 278.

Contracts in ordinary form were entered into by him for the purchase & sale of cotton at future dates, but resp. had no intention of either taking up or delivering cotton & only differences on settlement were either received or paid. The brokers were aware that no cotton was to be delivered & that the transactions were of a speculative character, but the merchants with whom the brokers dealt were unaware of the terms of the contracts between the brokers & resp. Between Feb. 1919, & Feb. 1923, there were sixteen such transactions, & in addition, resp. entered into a number of joint transactions of a similar nature between Dec. 1926, & Apr. 1928. Resp. was assessed to income tax under Sched. D. for each of the years from 1921–22 to 1928–29, inclusive, in respect of profits from these transactions. On appeal, he contended that the transactions were entirely disconnected with his business & were purely betting transactions on the prices of cotton, the profits of which were not assessable either under Case I. or Case II., as from a trade or vocation, or under Case VI. The General Comrs. decided that the transactions were not part of resp.'s trade & not a trade in themselves & were not liable under Case I. or Case VI. of Sched. D. :—Held : the profits arising from the transactions were annual profits or gains assessable to income tax under Case VI. of Sched. D.—TOWNSEND v. GRUNDY (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 140.

460b. — Sale of estate by architect.—Applt., an architect in practice, was on a social occasion told by the owner of an estate that he wished to sell his property. Later he arranged a meeting between the owner & a client, the outcome of which was that the client purchased the estate on behalf of his co. Subsequently applt. entered into an agreement, which was recorded in correspondence, with the purchasing co., whereby he undertook to endeavour to dispose of the estate & in conjunction with the co., to negotiate with the parties concerned on the terms that the co. should pay him one-fourth of the net profits of the sale. The estate was sold soon afterwards & applt. received from the co. his share of the net profits thereof. He took no part in the negotiations for the acquisition or the re-sale of the estate; he was not consulted in regard thereto; & did no work in connection with the estate as a surveyor or architect beyond the preparation of a plan which was not in fact used. On appeal against an assessment to income tax, Sched. D., in respect of the sum received, applt. contended that it was not income assessable to income tax. The Special Comrs. confirmed the assessment under Sched. D., Case VI. :—Held : the payment to applt. was made in fulfilment of an enforceable contract for services & was correctly assessed under Sched. D., Case VI.—BROCKLESBY v. MERRICKS (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 576, C. A.

460c. — Repayment of excess profits.—Two partners in a business firm retired from the firm as from Dec. 31, 1920, on the terms that they should be paid in cash their shares in the partnership assets as at that date, the continuing partners being their debtors for such shares, with interest, till paid. Negotiations as to the value of the assets took place & in Dec. 1922, the retired partners agreed to accept a lump sum in settlement of their shares of the assets, subject to the addition of a share of the excess profits duty repayable to the firm for the year 1920. The repayment of excess profits duty was made to the continuing partners in two instalments in Jan. & Oct. 1923, & a proportionate share was at once paid over by them to the retired partners. The total sum repaid was, with the continuing partners' assent, treated for income tax purposes as a profit of the business for the year 1923 & brought into average accordingly in computing the assessments on the firm, as then constituted, under Case I. of Sched. D. for 1924-25, 1925-26 & 1926-27. Later, the retired partners paid to the continuing partners a sum representing the income tax at the rates in force for 1924-25, 1925-26 & 1926-27 on the amounts by which the assessments on the firm for those years were increased by the inclusion in the profits of the year 1923 of the retired partners' share of the amount of the excess profits duty repayment. Applt. in the first case was one of the continuing partners. He appealed against assessments to supertax for 1925-26, 1926-27 and 1927-28 made on the footing that his income from the partnership for the respective preceding years must be deemed to be the share to which he was entitled during these years in the partnership profits as assessed to income tax & that no deduction could be allowed on the ground that in arriving at the income tax assessments the whole amount of the excess profits duty repayments in 1923 was brought into average. He contended (inter alia) that he was entitled to exclude from the computation of his income for super tax purposes the amount paid to the retired partners, whose income it was. The Special Comrs. decided that the basis on which applt. had been assessed was correct. Resps. in the second case were the exors. of one of the retired partners & they appealed against assessments to super tax for 1925-26, 1926-27 & 1927-28 made on the basis that a proportion, corresponding to his share in the partnership of the amounts by which the assessments made on the firm to income tax under Case I. of Sched. D. for the years 1924-25, 1925-26 & 1926-27 were increased by the inclusion of the amount of the excess profits duty repayment in the profits of the year 1923 formed part of the income of deceased for those years. They contended (inter alia) that the payments made by the continuing partners to the retired partners were capital payments being part of their share in the assets of the partnership, or alternatively, that the repaid excess profits duty was a profit of the firm for the year 1923, when the retired partners were no longer entitled to any share in the firm's profits. The Special Comrs. decided that no part of the payments could be regarded as the income of the deceased for 1924-25, 1925-26 & 1926-27, in which years he was not entitled to any share in the partnership profits & did not in fact receive any payment thereout:—Held: (1) the repayment of excess profits duty was a profit of the old partnership which should in strictness have been assessed under Case VI. of Sched. D. on the old partners; (2) while the income tax assessments as made under Case I. of Sched. D. were conclusive for income tax purposes, the amount of the excess profits duty repayment included therein was not, as regards the share paid over to the retired partners, the beneficial income of the continuing partners & must be excluded in computing their income for super tax purposes; (3) while the share of the repayment paid over to the retired partners constituted income in their hands for income tax & super tax purposes, the super tax liability arose in the years 1923-24 & 1924-25 (the repayment having been made in the respective preceding years 1922-23 & 1923-24) & not in the years for which assessments under appeal were made.—*RIGDEN v. (which had been incorporated with the object of assisting the first-mentioned co., together with two other cos. to obtain finance for the acquisition of laundries) to guarantee the payment of the dividend on the 7 per cent. Preference shares of the second co.:—Held: the first co. was, in substance, a holding co. & the Deferred shares which it obtained from the second co. under its guarantee, & the value of which was £12,500, were in the nature of a capital asset not assessable to income tax, the giving of the guarantee in

"paying such dividend shall be entitled to deduct the tax appropriate thereto":—Held: by "the tax appropriate thereto" was meant the tax at the standard rate on the gross amount of the dividend paid by the co. & not a proportionate part of the tax paid by the co. in the year in which the dividend was paid in respect of its profits or gains; & therefore, in making the return of his total income for the purpose of surtax the shareholder must include the gross amount of the dividend, & not the proportionate part of the total income on which the co. had borne tax for the year of assessment in which the profits distributed were made.—*HAMILTON v. The members were divided into three classes according to income, the largest class consisting of persons in comparatively poor circumstances. An annual membership fee was charged, varying, according to the class, from 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. per annum. The fees charged for the services of a nurse, or for admission to the assocn.'s hospital, varied from sums which, in the case of the poorest class, were considerably below the cost of the services rendered, to sums which, in the case of the wealthiest class, were reasonably equivalent to such cost. Nursing facilities, when not required for members, were granted to non-members at increased rates. Funds were held by the assocn. which had been raised by public subscription, & the hospital had been acquired with funds similarly raised. His trustees spent part of the funds in establishing a temperance hotel, containing a middle-class cafe & a cheap working-class cafe, free reading & recreation-rooms, & bedrooms, & a lecture-hall, which could be hired at moderate figures. Their policy was to make the hotel pay its way without earning profits, & the balance of the trust funds was invested & the interest was used to make good an annual deficit on the working of the hotel:—Held: the interest formed part of the income of a trust established for "charitable pur-duly accounted for the tax so deducted. Thereupon an additional assessment was made upon appts. in respect of the warrants cashed in New York & Amsterdam:—Held: the contract between appts. & the debenture-holders was an obligation to pay in sterling the balance that remained after deducting from the sterling sum the amount of the income tax at the then current rate calculated thereon; it was only of the balance so arrived at which the holder could at his option claim payment in the foreign currency; the time of the encashment of the warrant subsequent to its being drawn was of no relevance for the purpose of the Income Tax Act; & therefore the claim by the additional assessment of the Comrs. of Inland Revenue failed.—*RHOKANA CORPN., LTD. v. 473 iv. ——— Flying club.—Appl't. co. was incorporated as a co. having no share capital & limited by guarantee, with the objects (inter alia) of promoting generally the pursuit of aviation, providing facilities for instructional & sporting flights by its members, & establishing, maintaining & conducting a club for the accommodation & convenience of its members. Membership of the club, which was open to British subjects over 18 years of age (without restrictions as to qualifications or capabilities but subject to election by the committee), carried with it membership of the co. The co. leased an aerodrome at which courses of instruction in aviation were given to members & aeroplanes were maintained for their use at fixed charges. The whole of the co.'s income, including an annual grant from the Govt., was applied exclusively to the furtherance of its objects & no part was paid by way of profits to its members. In May, 1930, the co. arranged an aerial pageant (subsequently repeated annually) at the aerodrome with the aim of furthering the objects of the co. & augmenting its income. Charges were made to the public for admission to the grounds of the aerodrome & for short flights & after payment of the expenses there remained a surplus which was added to the co.'s funds.

The co. claimed exemption from income tax in respect of the profits of the pageant & certain untaxed interest on the ground that it was a body established for charitable purposes only. The Special Comrs. refused the claim, holding that the co. was formed for the promotion of flying by its members & was primarily a club.—Held: the co. was not a body established for charitable purposes only.—SCOTTISH FLYING CLUB, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1935), 20 Tax Cas. 1.—SCOT.

473 v. ——— Pharmaceutical Society.—The Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland is a corporate body established by the Pharmacy Act (Ir.), 1875. The preamble of that Act recited that, to remedy the inconvenience to the public resulting from a deficiency of shops for the sale of medicines & compounding of prescriptions, it was expedient that such a Society should be formed. The Act requires the Society to keep registers of qualified pharmaceutical chemists & of chemists & druggists, & to cause examinations to be held of candidates for registration. The Society is empowered to make regulations having statutory force, & in accordance with its regulations it maintains schools, charges fees for lectures & examinations, pays inspectors & causes proceedings to be instituted against unqualified persons who retail drugs or compound medicines, & against persons who infringe the provisions of certain statutes as to the sale of poisons. Rather more than one-quarter of the registered pharmaceutical chemists & druggists in Ireland are members or associates of the Society. The Act renders it unlawful for unregistered persons to retail poisons or compound prescriptions. Membership of the Society does not confer any pecuniary benefit & the Society exercises no special disciplinary or other control over the general body of registered persons. The Society was assessed to income tax under Sched. A in respect of premises which it owned & occupied, & under Sched. D in respect of income from securities & possessions, & profits from schools & examinations. The Society claimed to be entitled to the exemptions specified in sect. 37 of Income Tax Act, 1918, & sect. 30 of Finance Act, 1921, & claimed that the carrying on of schools & examinations did not constitute a "trade" within sect. 237 of Income Tax Act, 1918. These claims were rejected by the Special Comrs. of Income Tax & on appeal by the Circuit Ct. judge, who at the request of the Society, stated a case for the opinion of the High Ct.—Held: the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland was established for two main purposes, (a) the provision of necessities for the health of the sick, which, being for the benefit of the public, was a charitable purpose; (b) the establishment of a professional Society to maintain a high standard of knowledge among pharmaceutical chemists by examination & teaching, & to secure that only those having such high standards should be permitted to keep open shop for the sale of poisons & the compounding of prescriptions, & this was not a charitable purpose. Accordingly the Society was not established "for charitable purposes only"; nor was its income applicable to such purposes only; further, the decision of the Circuit Ct. judge that the carrying on of the schools & examinations constituted a "trade" within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts was correct; the question whether or not any particular activity constituted a "trade" within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts was a question of fact. The Circuit Ct. judge was, therefore, correct in holding that the Society was not entitled to the exemptions claimed.—PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF IRELAND v. SPECIAL COMRS. OF INCOME TAX, [1938] I. R. 202.—IR.

B. died on April 19, 1927. The income from this fund was assessed for income tax under the Income War Tax Act, such assessment being confirmed by the Minister of National Revenue, from whose decision the applt. appealed.—Held: there is but one trust with two trustees, & the trust fund is being administered by the Canadian trustee, in Canada, where it must remain until 1948, & where the income is taxable; (2) the persons who may in the future become beneficiaries of the trust fund are unascertained, & any interest of persons in the trust fund is a contingent one, & therefore the income is taxable as provided for in sect. 11 (2) of the Act; (3) the income here accumulating is not the income of a charitable institution with sect. 4 (e) of the Act; (4) sect. 66 of the Act does not vest a discretionary power in the ct. to forego interest on any tax recovered by a judgment of the ct.—BIRTWISTLE (PETER) TRUST v. They decided therefore that the Institution was not a body of persons established for charitable purposes only & was not entitled to exemption from income tax:—Held: the question was one of fact, & the Comrs. had evidence before them to support their conclusion.—MIDLAND COUNTIES INSTITUTION OF ENGINEERS v. Palestine, Syria, or other parts of Turkey in Asia & the Peninsula of Sinai for the purpose of settling Jews on such lands." Then follow in the memorandum twenty-one specified objects & powers which included power to cultivate & improve any lands & erect buildings thereon, to let any land of the co. to any Jews, to acquire, construct & manage tramways, railways, harbours, docks, hydraulic works, telegraphs, telephones, factories & workshops, & to purchase & sell, work & develop mines & mining rights, & to carry on the business of mining & metallurgy. All the twenty-one objects or powers were stated to be subject to a proviso that they were to be "exercised only in such a way as shall in the opinion of the assocn. be conducive to the attainment of the said primary object." No part of the income of the assocn. was distributable by way of dividend, bonus or otherwise by way of profit to the members of the assocn., nor, in the event of a winding up, were the surplus assets distributable among them:—Held: the assocn. was not "a body of persons . . . established for charitable purposes only" within 1918 Act, s. 37 (1) (b), so as to be entitled to exemption from income tax in

The co. held monthly meetings at which papers were read & discussed on subjects of professional interest & certain of the papers were printed & circulated to other British & foreign associations. 483c. ——— Established in United Kingdom—What amounts to.].—A testator gave the balance of his property in England & Russia to establish a charitable home in Ontario. Testator was domiciled in Ontario, & the will was proved in 1925 by one exor. in England & by another in Ontario. In 1925 the Canada Trust Co. was by order of the ct. in Ontario appointed a trustee of the will in place of the Canadian exor. On Nov. 30 the English exor. paid over to the Canada Trust Co. £50,000 & received an indemnity & release therefor, but, as he was unable to obtain a release & indemnity in respect of the balance of the English & Russian estate in his hands, he retained the same. The income of this balance was assessed to English income tax, & the trustee claimed exemption therefor, as being the income of a charity:—Held: (1) the exemption of charities applies only to the income of bodies of persons or trusts established in the United Kingdom; (2) as two of the original trustees had been resident in the United Kingdom & one still was so resident, the trust was established in the United Kingdom, & the exemption applied.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 483d. Exemption of industrial societies—1918 Act, s. 39—Number of shares unlimited.].—Resp. Society, which was registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893 (c. 39), claimed exemption under Sched. D. on the ground that the number of its shares was not limited by its rules or practice. The Society was formed to carry on the business of (inter alia) manufacturers & dealers in butter, cheese, milk & other dairy products. Admission to membership was at the discretion of the committee & subject to taking up a qualifying number of shares; further every member was bound by the Society's rules to sell to the Society any milk produced on any lands farmed by him if required to do so. The number of shares held by any individual member was limited to 200. The majority of the members were dairy farmers, & milk dealers & consumers were not in practice admitted to membership. Approximately 98 per cent. of the Society's sales were made to non-members. The Crown contended that practically the whole of the Society's sales were to non-members, & that the restriction of membership in general to persons willing to supply milk to the Society & the exclusion of milk dealers constituted an effective limitation of shares. The General Comrs. found in favour of the Society:—Held: the number of the Society's shares was not limited within 1918 Act, s. 39 (4), either by its rules or practice, & it was entitled to the exemption.—BENSTED v. MIDLAND DAIRY FARMERS, LTD. SOC. (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 57.

483e. Trade carried on by beneficiaries—Finance Act, 1921 (c. 32), s. 30 (1) (c)—Profits of convent school.].—The Convent was a branch of a religious order established for the sanctification of its members by worship & by labour for the benefit of their fellow creatures, particularly by the Christian education of young girls & the care of the sick. The members of the community took vows of poverty & were entirely dependent on the Convent for their bodily needs. In addition to their training in matters of religion, they were educated to take part in carrying on the school or other work of the Convent of which they were members. The main work of the Convent was to carry on a school.

The Comrs. refused the Convent's claim for exemption from Income Tax in respect of the school profits for the years 1923–24 to 1926–27, inclusive, under Finance Act, 1921 (c. 32), s. 30 (1) (c). As from 1927–28, applts. had been allowed exemption under Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 24. The Special Comrs., on appeal, decided that the members of the Convent were not beneficiaries but the instruments of the work of the charity & of the trade so far as profits were made:—Held: the nuns were beneficiaries of the charity, which was accordingly entitled to exemption in respect of the profits of the school.—BRIGHTON CONVENT OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 76.

488a. — Headmaster—School established by congregation of secular priests.—Applt., who was a member of a congregation of secular priests, was headmaster of a school established by the congregation. Under a scheme of government approved by the Board of Education, the school was under the management of a governing body subject to the ultimate control of the congregation. Applt. was originally appointed in 1910 by a resolution of the governing body. In Dec. 1924, in order to comply with the requirements of the Board of Education, a written agreement in the form prescribed by the local education authority was entered into between applt. & the governing body. In the school accounts the amount of applt.'s salary was included as an item of expenditure, while the same amount was entered in the receipts as a donation by the congregation. These entries were book entries only & no money passed. On appeal against an assessment to income tax made on him under Sched. E for the year 1924–25 in respect of his office as headmaster, applt. contended that his service was gratuitous & that he had no contractual right to the salary. The Special Comrs. decided that applt. had a legal claim to the salary against his employers, the governing body, & they confirmed the assessment:—Held: on the special facts of the case, applt.'s office was not an office or employment of profit for income tax purposes.—READE v. BREARLEY (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 687.

PART VI. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

§ i. —.—.—[Notwithstanding the provisions of sect. 100 of South Africa Act, which provides that the remuneration of judges of the Supreme Ct. appointed after Union shall not be diminished during their continuance in office, a judge of the Supreme Ct. appointed after Union is not exempted from paying income tax under Act 40 of 1925 on the amount of his salary.—KRAUSE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1929] App. D. 286.—S. AF.

§ ii. — Officer of Permanent Militia.—The Special Income Tax Act, 1933 (Man.), is applicable to members of the Active Militia, Permanent Force.—A.-G. FOR MANITOBA v. WORTHINGTON, [1934] 3 W. W. R. 658.—CAN.

§ iii. — Judges—Saskatchewan.—The judges of the Ct. of Appeal, the Ct. of King's Bench, & the District Cts. of the Province of Saskatchewan are subject to the taxation authorised by the Income Tax Act, 1932, of Saskatchewan, & their salary & allowances, paid pursuant to the Judges Act, R. S. C. 1927, must accordingly be included in their income for the purpose of the Income Tax Act, 1932. Judicial emoluments are not protected by any paramount principle making inapplicable to such income a tax imposed by a statute in terms wide enough to include it. Neither the independence nor any other attribute of the judiciary could be affected by a general income tax which charged their official incomes on the same footing as the incomes of other citizens.—JUDGES, THE v. A.-G. FOR SASKATCHEWAN (1937), 53 T. L. R. 464; 81 Sol. Jo. 186, P. C.—CAN.

§ g. Ordinarily resident in Manitoba—Dominion minister.—The question whether a person is resident in a certain place, within the meaning of an income tax Act, is, in the absence of a definition of the word in the Act,

489a. —.—.—[Applt., who at all relevant times was a person residing in the United Kingdom for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts, was employed by an English co. at the co.'s mines in West Africa, & the whole of his duties were performed outside the United Kingdom. The greater part of his remuneration was paid in London, & the remainder was paid abroad. Applt., having been assessed under Sched. E as amended by Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 18, in respect of the remuneration arising from his employment, contended that under the Acts there was no liability for income tax upon the profits of an employment carried on wholly outside the United Kingdom, & that his employment was not an employment of profit in the United Kingdom for any of the years of assessment within Sched. E., r. 6, which provides that "the tax shall be paid in respect of all the public offices & employments of profit within the United Kingdom . . ." :—Held: applt. in the circumstances was assessable to income tax in respect of his earnings under Sched. E., as his case clearly fell within Sched. D., Case II., which Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 18, transferred to Sched. E.; there was no case for the liberal construction applied in Colquhoun v. Brooks; Sched. E. must be widened in its scope to relate to the employments which were the subject of the transferred sub-paragraph.—EATON-TURNER v. MCKENNA, [1937] A. C. 162; [1936] 3 All E. 489b. — Foreign director of British company.—Applt. in the first case was appointed foreign director of a British co. for fourteen years from 1918. The co. had subsidiary cos. on the Continent, the principal one being a French co. of which applt. was managing director. He was also a director of a German co., & had control over selling organisations in other European countries. He was thus responsible for the whole of the British co.'s a question of law & fact, chiefly of fact. Residence is founded on actual physical presence in a place for some appreciable period of time, coupled with an intention to remain there. The intention may be inferred from the circumstances surrounding his presence or from the relationship which he bears to the place. Likewise the circumstances in which a person remains absent from a locality may determine whether he has ceased to reside in the locality. A Dominion cabinet minister who, upon his appointment to the cabinet, leased the house in which he had dwelt in Manitoba, placed his business there under a manager, & moved his family to Ottawa, where he & his family have ever since had their home, & whose visits to Manitoba have been infrequent & brief.—Held: not to be "residing or ordinarily resident" in Manitoba.—Re INCOME TAX ACT (MANITOBA), [1933] 3 W. W. R. 189; 41 Man. L. R. 621.—CAN.

Continental business, & his only remuneration was a fixed salary payable by the British co. plus commission on the co.'s profits from trading on the Continent. Since 1918 applt. had lived in Paris with his family. He came to London once a month to attend the co.'s directors' meetings, his function being to report & advise the directors on questions affecting the Continental business. It was no part of his duty to attend to the general business of the co. Applt. was assessed in respect of salary & commission for each year from 1920-21 to 1928-27 by the General Comrs. for the division in which the co.'s registered office was situated:—Held: (1) his office was an office within the United Kingdom; (2) the General Comrs. had jurisdiction to assess for 1920-21 & 1921-22 as well as for later years.—PROCTOR v. RYALL, RYALL v. PROCTOR (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 204.

489c. — Civil servant—Appointment abroad.—An established Civil Servant was appointed by the Lords Comrs. of the Admiralty to a post which necessitated his residing in a colony for several years. During that time he received, in addition to the salary appropriate to his rank in the Civil Service, a colonial allowance to provide for the increased cost of living in the colony. During part of the time he occupied an official house provided for him, & during other parts of the time he received a housing allowance in lieu of an official house:—Held: (1) he was assessable to income tax under Sched. E, & the tax was chargeable, not only on the salary, but also on the colonial allowance & housing allowance, which must be brought into charge & were not deductible as expenses; (2) the annual value of the official residence was not income chargeable with tax, since it was not money, nor convertible into money by the Civil Servant.—ROBINSON v. CORRY, CORRY v. ROBINSON, [1934] 1 K. B. 240; 103 L. J. K. B. 228; 150 L. T. 250; 50 T. L. R. 125; 78 Sol. Jo. 12; 18 Tax Cas. 411, C. A.

489d. Office of profit—Director—Salary waived unless debenture interest earned.—A director of a co. waived his salary unless the co. should earn the interest on its debentures. The debenture interest was not earned:—Held: nevertheless the director still held an "office of profit" & was assessable on the salary.—HENRY v. GALLOWAY (1933), 148 L. T. 453; 49 T. L. R. 191; 77 Sol. Jo. 64; 17 Tax Cas. 470.

489e. — Absolute waiver of fees.—Applt., a director of a limited co., agreed, in view of unfavourable trade, conditions, to waive altogether his director's fees for the year ending Feb. 22, 1933, & informed the co. to that effect by letter dated Feb. 15, 1933. No director's fees were accordingly paid to him for the year 1932-33. On appeal against an assessment to income tax, Sched. E., made upon him for the year 1932-33, in respect of his office as director, on the basis of the amount of his fees for the preceding year, applt. contended (a) that in the year of assessment he ceased to hold an office or employment of profit under the co., & (b) that the case was distinguishable from that of Henry v. Galloway, because the waiver of fees was absolute & not merely contingent. The Special Comrs. confirmed the assessment:—Held: the office of profit had not ceased merely because in the year of assessment no remuneration had been received.—OLIVER v. CHUTER (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 570, C. A.

Annotations:—Reft. Cull v. Cowcher (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 449; Dewar v. I. R. Comrs. (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 561.

489f. — Of benevolent fund.—Applt. was vice-president & a director of a Benevolent Fund incorporated under Special Acts of Parliament. By the rules of the Fund the directors were empowered to make reasonable allowances to persons affording assistance in the management of the Fund & to cause to be paid all expenses incidental thereto. During the year material to the appeal the applt. attended seventy-four directors' meetings & received one guinea in respect of each meeting. On appeal against an assessment to income tax made upon him under Sched. E in respect of these sums less an allowance of 25 per cent. for expenses, applt. contended (a) that his office of director was not an office or employment of profit assessable under Sched. E, & (b) that the whole sum paid was simply an allowance for sums expended wholly, exclusively & necessarily in the performance of his duties. The Special Comrs. decided that the sum paid to applt. constituted remuneration as a director in respect of which he was assessable under Sched. E, & in the absence of detailed evidence, which was not tendered, of applt.'s expenditure, that the allowance made in respect of expenses was adequate:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decision was correct.—DINGLEY v. MACNULTY (1937), 81 Sol. Jo. 588; 21 Tax Cas. 152.

489g. Ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom—Question of fact.—Prior to Apr. 24, 1926, resp. was resident & ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom. On that date he left the United Kingdom to enter the employment of a financial firm in New York. The employment was in the nature of an apprenticeship, with a view to his becoming a European representative of the firm. During each of the years 1926-27, 1927-28 & 1928-29, he visited the United Kingdom on his employers' business. He was not a householder in the United Kingdom, nor had he a fixed place of abode there, but he resided at hotels during his visits. On appeal, the General Comrs. decided that in each of the three years he was not resident in the United Kingdom:—Held: there was evidence on which the Comrs. could come to their finding of fact that resp. was not resident in the United Kingdom.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. COMBE (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 405.

495a. Whitsuntide offerings to curate.]
A voluntary collection was taken in church at Whitsuntide for the benefit of the assistant stipendiary curate licensed by the Bishop to that church. Contributions were solicited by the Vicar in the parish magazine on the ground of the curate's "devoted & earnest ministry amongst us":—Held: the assistant stipendiary curate was the holder of an office or employment of profit within Sched. E of 1918 Act, & the Whitsuntide offerings were chargeable to income tax as emoluments of his office under Sched. E, r. 1, of 1918 Act.—SLANEY v. STARKEY (REV. E. S.), [1931] 2 K. B. 148; 100 L. J. K. B. 341; 145 L. T. 453; 47 T. L. R. 323; 75 Sol. Jo. 247; 16 Tax Cas. 45.

496a. ——— Gift to directors of company.]—
Held: the payment, although called a gift, was extra remuneration paid to the directors, & was assessable to income tax.—RADCLIFFE v. HOLT (1927), 11 Tax Cas. 621.

496b. ——— After retirement.]—It was the custom of a co. to grant an annual allowance to members of its staff by way of pension on retirement. Resp. had been managing director of the co., & after his retirement the directors made him a voluntary allowance annually. They subsequently stopped this annual allowance & paid resp. a lump sum as a gift in lieu thereof:—Held: the allowances could not be regarded as supplementary salary. They were not "a profit or gain arising from an employment," nor could they be considered as receipts in respect of an office, but were merely gifts, & resp. was not liable to income tax on the sums so received by him.—BENYON v. sb. "Salary"—Annual allowance to Bishop from Colonial Bishopric Fund.]—The Lord Bishop of Lucknow received ex officio a gratuitous annual allowance from a certain fund known as the Colonial Bishopric Fund, London. The allowance was payable in London & was paid in London:—Held: "it came within the term "salary" in sect. 7 (1) of Income Tax Act, & the income, being payable on account of the payee being in British India, & there filling the character of the Lord Bishop of Lucknow, accrued or arose in British India, within sect. 4 (1), although it was received in London.—RE LUCKNOW (Bp.) (1931), 1 L. R. 54 All. 223.—IND.

sf. Maintenance of priest-in-charge of Roman Catholic mission.]—Apld. was the priest-in-charge of a Roman Catholic mission in the Archdiocese of Glasgow. He was appointed by the Archbishop & might be moved by him. The income of the mission was mainly derived from offertories & other contributions by church members which the Ordinances of the Roman Catholic Church in Scotland deem to be the property of the church & not gifts to the priest, but out of which the priest will receive what is needed for his "seemly maintenance." The income of the mission was paid into a bank account in the names of applt. & his Archbishop, & normally all the expenses of the mission were met by cheques drawn on this account by applt. Included among these disbursements was a salary of £50 to applt.

which was admittedly chargeable to income tax, & household expenses, viz., food, drink, fuel, wages, etc., incurred at the presbytery house where applt. in accordance with the regulations of the Archdiocese, lived communally with three curates. The priest-in-charge of a mission in Scotland is not necessarily the person who administers the funds, & in all cases the administration is subject to regular & effective control by the Archbishop or Bishop as the case may be, who may & does (inter alia) curtail or decrease at his discretion the expenditure on maintenance of the clergy. The Special Comrs. dismissed an appeal by applt. against an assessment to income tax, Sched. E., made on him in respect of his maintenance at the presbytery house:—Held: applt. was the trustee of the revenues of the mission, the maintenance was received by him in kind, & not being capable of conversion into money, was not assessable to income tax as part of the emoluments of his office.—DALY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1934] S. C. 444; 18 Tax Cas. 641.—SCOT.

sg. Payment to executor for services.]—Testator by his will named three exors. including his son J. Subsequently one of the named exors. died. Later, by codicil, testator appointed two additional exors. By a subsequent codicil he directed that his son J. be paid $500 a month "in addition to any sum which the ots. or other proper authorities may allow him in common with the other exors." Testator died on Dec. 5, 1923. Nothing was paid to J. in connection with said direction for payment of $500 a month until Mar. 5, 1927, when a lump sum of $19,500 was paid him to cover the period from testator's death to that date. From that date until his death in 1932, J. received the $500 a month. The Minister of National Revenue claimed, under Income War Tax Act, R. S. C., 1927, for income tax in respect of the payments so received by J.: Held: (1) on interpretation of the will, the $500 a month directed to be paid to J. was not a legacy, but additional remuneration to him as exor., & as such, was taxable income; (2) the said lump sum of $19,500 was assessable for income tax in respect of 1927, the taxation year in which it was actually received, notwithstanding the $18,000 of that sum represented arrears that had fallen due during preceding years (the result being that, under the Act, a higher percentage of taxation was imposed than if $6,000 had been allocated to each of the preceding three years).—CAPITAL TRUST CORPN., LTD., & COFFEY v. st. Salary of partner—Paid after death.]—R., a member of a partnership, was entitled, under an agreement with the other members of the partnership by which his interest in the firm was established as that of a special partner, to a salary of $15,000 per year "during his lifetime & to continue for six months after his death." R. died, & the firm paid to the exor. of his will the sum of $3,750 as so much of the greater amount payable for six months after his death, under the terms of the agreement. The exor. treated this payment as an accretion to the capital of the estate. Under the terms of R.'s will the revenue from this sum of money was paid to R.'s widow. R.'s widow, applt. herein, was assessed income tax on the said sum of $3,750, which assessment was confirmed by the Minister of National Revenue, from whose decision she appealed to this ct.:—Held: the assessment was improperly made & must be set aside.—RIDDELL v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE, [1938] 5 Ex. C. R. 135.—CAN.

496c. Headmaster's pension.]—The Governing Body of a school, which was a corp'n. founded by Royal Charter, in exercise of their powers under the charter, granted an annual pension out of the school funds to a headmaster on his retirement. There was no scheme in existence under which the headmaster could have qualified for a pension, & the Governing Body had the right at any time to rescind the minute under which the pension was granted & to cease making payments to him:—Held: the pension was not chargeable to income tax under Sched. E. as amended by Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 18.—STEDEFORD v. BELOE, [1932] A. C. 388; 101 L. J. K. B. 268; 146 L. T. 456; 48 T. L. R. 291; 76 Sol. Jo. 217; 16 Tax Cas. 505, H. L.

496d. — Voluntary pension of railway official—Effect of statutory amalgamation.]—An official of the L. & S. W. Ry. Co. retired in 1911 & was granted, by way of addition to his pension from the co.'s superannuation fund, a further allowance payable during the pleasure of the directors. In 1923 the L. & S. W. Ry. Co. was absorbed, together with other cos., by the newly-formed S. R. Co., & it was provided by S. R. & O. that persons who had been members of superannuation funds of the amalgamated cos. should be entitled to the same benefits, rights & privileges as they would have been entitled to if the amalgamation had not taken place. The Special Comrs., on appeal, decided that for the year 1930–31 the further allowance was not a mere voluntary payment, but was a pension assessable under Sched. E.:—Held: the further allowance was, after the amalgamation, as before, a voluntary payment.—OWENS v. INGLIS (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 375.

496e. — Applts. were employees of a firm of stockjobbers. In addition to their salary of a fixed amount, they both received from the firm for each of the years 1927–28 & 1928–29 the sum of £3,000; for the year 1929–30 they received the sums of £310 & £500, respectively. These additional sums, which were deducted as expenses in arriving at the firm's profits for income tax purposes, were paid to applts. at the sole discretion of the partners. No such payments were made to them for the year 1930–31. Applts. were assessed under Sched. E. in respect of these additional payments, for the year 1927–28 on the actual amounts received for that year, & for the years 1928–29 & 1929–30 on the amounts received for the respective preceding years. The amounts as assessed for the three years thus exceeded the actual receipts of the period. On appeal against the 1929–30 assessments, applts. contended (a) that the additional payments were gifts & as such not assessable; (b) that, as the amounts of the assessments were in excess of the actual receipts, there was a double assessment; & (c) that, even if the payments were assessable, Case VI. of Sched. D. provided the proper method of assessment. The Comrs. for the Public Offices in the City of London decided that the additional payments were perquisites or profits paid to applts. in respect of an office or employment of profit & were properly assessed under Sched. E.:—Held: (1) there was evidence upon which the Comrs. could find that the payments were assessable under Sched. E.; & (2) there was no double assessment.—DENNY v. REEP (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 254.

498a. — Sum paid to salaried officer—For negotiating sale of business.]—Resp., who was secretary of a limited co., was authorised by the directors of the co., to negotiate for the sale of the co.'s works, & it was agreed verbally that anything realised in excess of a specified amount should be paid to resp. Resp. arranged the sale of the works to a new co. & the directors of the old co. by minute, authorised the payment to resp. of the agreed excess amount "for services rendered by him in connection with the negotiations & completion of the sale." The amount was subsequently paid to resp. by the liquidator of the old co. & was described in the liquidator's accounts as a payment "for services rendered prior to liquidation." At the time when the payment was authorised resp. had ceased to perform the duties of secretary of the old co. or to receive any salary, though he remained secretary in name. Resp. was assessed to income tax under Sched. E. in respect of this sum, as representing profits of his office of secretary, & the General Comrs., on appeal, held that the sum was a gift & not taxable:—Held: there was no evidence upon which the Comrs. could come to their conclusion.—SHIPWAY v. SKIDMORE (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 748.

501b. — Compensation for loss of office.]—Resps. in these cases were directors of a limited co. They had no written contracts of service with the co. Art. 109 of the co.'s arts. provided that in the event of any director, who had held office for not less than five years, dying or resigning or ceasing to hold office for any cause other than misconduct, bkpcy., lunacy or incompetence, the co. should pay to him or his representatives by way of compensation for loss of office a sum equal to the total remuneration received by him in the preceding five years. All three directors had held office for not less than five years. In cases (a) & (b) resp. resigned office as director & received from the co. as "compensation" a payment calculated in accordance with Art. 109. In case (c) resp. desired to retire from active management of the co., but his co-directors wished to be able still to consult him, & it was agreed that he should resign the office of Chairman, receive as "compensation" a lump sum in lieu of the provision under Art. 109, waiving any future claim under that article, & remain on the board of the co. at a reduced rate of remuneration:—Held: (1) in the Court of Appeal, in cases (a) & (b) the payment constituted a profit of the office of director & was properly assessable to income tax under Sched. E. for the last year of office. In these cases there was no appeal to the House of Lords; (2) in the House of Lords, in case (c) in the circumstances of that case the sum received was not income assessable to income tax.—*HENRY v. #### 501c. Right to take shares at par.]

S., the managing director of L. & Co., as such, was entitled to a yearly salary, but in addition, under resolutions each year, was given the right to apply for & take up at par "A" ordinary shares of the co. The shares in the years in question were very considerably above par. This was stated in the resolutions to be given to him for his special services as director. S., in fact, had not sold any of the shares so taken up. Assessments were made on S. in respect of the premium value of the allotted shares. S. alleged that he had not received a profit in respect of his office or employment of profit assessable to tax, but that he had received a non-transferable privilege which was not money. The right to apply for the shares at par was not transferable. The revenue contended that S. had received a valuable privilege for services rendered as director, & that privilege was convertible into money. The Special Comrs. upheld S.'s contention:—Held: the advantage given to S. as managing director by the allotment of the "A" ordinary shares of the co. came under the words "or profits whatsoever" in rule 1 of Sched. E. He was, therefore, assessable to income tax in respect of the profit given to & enjoyed by him.—SALMON v. WEIGHT (1935), 153 L. T. 55; 51 T. L. R. 333; sub nom. *WEIGHT v. 501d. ——— Provision of residence & expenses of upkeep.]—Resp., who was a life governing director of & held a controlling interest in a co., entered into an agreement with the co. which provided (a) that he should be appointed managing director of the co. for ten years, or until prior determination of the agreement by resp. at twelve months' notice, at a specified salary, together with any bonus & director's fees voted to him; & (b) that, during the continuance of the agreement, resp., who had intimated that, owing to the cost of upkeep, he might have to vacate the house which he owned & occupied as a residence, should, as requested by the co. for the convenience & prestige of its business, continue to reside in the house, the co. undertaking to pay all outgoings in respect of the house, including rates, taxes & insurance, & the cost of gas, electric light & telephone, & to maintain the house & gardens in proper condition. Resp. was assessed under Sched. E. in respect (inter alia) of the amount actually expended by the co. on the upkeep, etc., of the house & gardens. On appeal he contended that the payments by the co. did not constitute money nor were they capable of being converted into money or income chargeable to him as an emolument of his office as managing director of the co.; & that, even if they were part of his income, he was entitled to have them deducted as expenses wholly, exclusively & necessarily incurred in performing his duties as managing director. The General Comrs. decided that the sums expended by the co. were not in the nature of additional salary of resp. or an emolument of his office liable under Sched. E., & they discharged the assessment:—Held: (1) the sums in question were income of resp. & were profits of his office as managing director of the co. assessable under Sched. E.; (2) no deduction was admissible in respect of them under Sched. E., r. 9.—NICOLL v. AUSTIN (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 531.

501e. ——— Payment for retaining office.]—

Resp., who for many years had been a director of a co., towards the end of 1934 notified his fellow-directors of his intention to resign, as he was entitled to do under the articles. The other directors thereupon wrote asking him not to serve notice of resignation, & saying that, in consideration of his not doing so, the co. would pay him a sum of £45,000, & would enter into a formal deed to that effect. The co. shortly afterwards entered into a deed, which recited that the co., in the circumstances set out in the letter, & for the consideration therein specified, agreed to pay resp. £45,000, in two amounts of £35,000 & £10,000 respectively. The remuneration of directors was at all material times by resolution of the co. in general meeting. Resp., who, previous to the execution of the deed, had received a salary of £1,500 a year, agreed to remain a director at £400 a year, on the understanding that he would devote less time in the future to the co.'s business. Resp. contended that the possibility of his resigning was a contingent liability on the co., that this liability had in the meantime been discharged by payment of the said sum of £45,000, & that the case was therefore analogous to Dewhurst's Case (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 605; Digest Supp., & the said sum was not liable to income tax:—Held: (1) the payment was not made in discharge of a contingent liability, as the co. owed resp. nothing, & the case was not, therefore, analogous to Dewhurst's Case, supra; (ii) the payment, being made in consideration of resp. remaining a director of the co., & he never having ceased to be such, constituted a profit arising from his office as director.—PRENDERGAST v. CAMERON, [1938] 2 All E. R. 617.

A professional cricketer in the service of the Kent County Cricket Club might, by the rules of the club, be granted a benefit but this was on the express understanding that he allowed the proceeds to be invested in the name of trustees of the club during the pleasure of the committee. The invested sum was always, however, eventually handed over to him when his career as a cricketer was over, or when he found an investment of which the trustees approved. Appl., a professional cricketer in the employment of the club, was granted a benefit, the proceeds from which, together with subscription, after being held by trustees on certain securities, were eventually handed to appl. & applied by him in the purchase of a farm. Appl. having been assessed under Sched. E., r. 1, of 1918 Act, on so much of the fund as represented the gate money at the match:—Held: appl. was not assessable in respect of this sum, inasmuch as it was a personal gift, & not a profit or perquisite arising from his employment within Sched. E., r. 1.—SEYMOUR v. REED, [1927] A. C. 554; 96 L. J. K. B. 839; 137 L. T. 312; 43 T. L. R. 584; 71 Sol. Jo. 488; 11 Tax Cas. 625, H. L.; reusq. S. C. sub nom. REED v. Sched. A. tax, rates & water rate in respect of the manse were paid on his behalf by the Church:—Held: the amount of such tax & rates did not form part of the emoluments of his office in respect of which he could be taxed under Sched. E., as his occupation of the manse was representative & not beneficial.—REED v. CATTERMOLE, [1937] 1 K. B. 613; [1937] 1 All E. R. 541; 106 L. J. K. B. 407; 156 L. T. 389; 53 T. L. R. 369; 81 Sol. Jo. 117; 21 Tax Cas. 35, C. A.

- 505a. — Beneficial interest in trust fund of employers.—Resp. was employed by a co. under a service agreement dated Aug. 1921, which provided (inter alia) that, in addition to an annual salary, he should have an interest in a "conditional fund," which was to be created by the co. by the payment after the end of each financial year of a sum out of its profits to the trustees of the fund to be invested by them in the purchase of the co.'s shares or debenture stock. Subject to possible forfeiture of his interest in certain events, resp. was entitled (i) to receive the income produced by the fund at the expiration of each financial year, & (ii) to receive part of the capital of the fund (or, at the trustees' option, the investments representing the same) at the expiration of five financial years & of each succeeding year, & on death while in the co.'s service or on the termination of his employment by the co., to receive the whole amount then standing to the credit of the capital account of the fund, or the actual investments. Resp., with the co.'s consent, resigned from its service in Sept. 1927, & at that date the trustees of the fund transferred to him the shares which they had purchased out of the payments made to them by the co. in the years 1922 to 1927. He was assessed under Sched. E. for 1927–28 on the amount of the current market value of the shares at the date of transfer. He appealed, contending (a) that, notwithstanding the liability to forfeiture of his interest in certain events, immediately a sum was paid by the co. to the trustees of the fund he became invested with a beneficial interest in the payment which formed part of his emoluments for the year in which it was made, & for no other year, & that, accordingly, the amount of the assessment for the year 1927–28 should not exceed the amount paid into the fund during the year of assessment, & (b) alternatively, that the assessment for 1927–28 ought not, in any event, to exceed the aggregate of the sums paid by the co. to the trustees, the difference between that amount & the value of the investments at the date of transfer representing a capital appreciation not liable to tax for any year:—Held: (1) resp. did not obtain a vested interest in the yearly payments made to the trustees at the dates when they were respectively made; (2) the value of the investments at the date of transfer to resp. by the trustees constituted additional remuneration of the year in which the transfer took place.—EDWARDS v. ROBERTS (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 618, C. A.

507b. Voluntary pension.]—Deceased applt. was for a number of years private chaplain at Clumber Church of the seventh Duke of Newcastle, who died in 1928. By his will the Duke authorised his trustees at their discretion to continue or discontinue the payment of any pension he was paying to any of his servants or employees at the date of his death, & to grant pensions of such amounts & for such periods as they thought fit to any other servants or employees. These pensions were to be payable by half-yearly payments out of the income of a fund to be set aside by the trustees, &, until such appropriation, out of the residuary estate. After the death of the Duke applt. continued to act as chaplain at Clumber until his retirement; during this period of service his salary was paid by the exors. of the Duke's will on an authority signed by the principal residuary legatees. On applt.'s resignation the same legatees signed a further authority to the exors. & trustees of the Duke, requesting them in their discretion to make a payment of £250 per annum to applt. by quarterly payments out of the income of the estate. The trustees acceded to this request, & on making the payments to applt. they deducted tax at the standard rate. Applt. was assessed under Sched. E. for each of the years 1932–33 & 1933–34 in the sum of £250. On appeal, he contended that the pension was an annual payment within General Rule 19, that he was entitled to the pension as a cestui que trust, the trustees having exercised their discretionary power of appointment under the will, & that, since he had already suffered tax by deduction on the payments, the assessments should be discharged. The General Comrs. decided that the payments in question constituted a voluntary pension & confirmed the assessments in principle, but they reduced the amounts to the actual sums received by applt.:—Held: the pension was payable not under the trustees' discretionary power but at the request of the residuary legatees, that the payments constituted a voluntary pension assessable under Sched. E. on the gross amount payable, & that the trustees had acted erroneously in deducting tax.—KEMP v. EVANS (1935), 20 Tax Cas. 14.

507c. Damages for breach of service agreement.]—By an agreement made in 1919 it was agreed that applt. should continue to act as general manager of a co. for a period of years ending in 1932 on terms which included the payment of a fixed salary & a commission on profits & also a right, in events, of succession to the office of managing director of the co. In 1923 the co. repudiated the agreement whereupon applt., who rendered no further services to the co., commenced an action in the High Ct. against the co. for payment of arrears of salary & commission, & for damages for wrongful repudiation of the agreement. The co. defended the action, contending that the agreement was not binding on it, & counterclaimed for sums already paid to applt. The action was ultimately compromised in 1928, the terms of the settlement including the cancellation of the agreement, the withdrawal of the co.'s counterclaim, & the payment by the co. to applt. of the sum of £57,250 as "agreed damages." Applt. was assessed under Sched. E. for the years 1923–24 to 1926–27, inclusive, in sums totalling £57,250, allocated in accordance with the provision made in the co.'s accounts for commission contingently payable to applt. for these years. The General Comrs. decided that £27,500 of the sum paid to applt. was income of the years in question & apportioned that amount rateably according to the assessments:—Held: the whole of the sum paid to applt. in settlement of the litigation was a capital payment as damages for cancellation of the service agreement, & was not assessable to income tax.—DU CROS v. RYALL (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 444.

510. For the existing paragraph substitute the following paragraph:—

— Additional remuneration of company director.]—Resp. as director of a co. was entitled as remuneration for his services to £3,000 per annum free of income tax. Towards the close of the year of assessment the co. in general meeting resolved that the directors be paid by way of additional remuneration for their services such a sum as after the provision of income tax would entitle them to receive the further sum of £25,000 free of tax:—Held: resp.'s share of such additional remuneration was not a perquisite, but was assessable by additional assessments under Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), Schedule E., rr. 1 & 5.—DAUNCEY v. HOWLETT (1926), 135 L. T. 279; 10 Tax Cas. 454.

512a. — New office—Director becoming member of executive committee.]—Resp. who had for many years, continuously, been the secretary & a director of a public co. resigned his position as secretary on Nov. 8, 1927, & was appointed a member of the executive committee. The executive committee met every week & in practice controlled & directed the ordinary conduct of the co.'s business, reporting to the full board of directors which met eight times a year. The members of such sum were not taxed or paid within the year of assessment.—M'KOWN v. ROE, [1928] I. R. 195.—IR.

—Held: he was chargeable to income tax for the year of assessment in respect of a sum for fees, notwithstanding that the bills of costs which included the committee, who were all directors of the co., devoted their whole time to the co.'s business & received additional remuneration for their services on the committee. Resp. appealed to the Special Comrs. against an additional assessment to income tax under Sched. E. for the year 1928–29 made upon the basis that he entered on a new office, that of member of the executive committee, on Nov. 8, 1927, & was assessable to income tax for 1928–29 under the provisions of Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 45 (4) (ii.). The Special Comrs. held that on appointment to the executive committee resp. did not enter upon a new office:—Held: there was evidence upon which the Special Comrs. could arrive at their conclusion of fact & they had not misdirected themselves in law.—MAY v. FALK (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 218.

Under the terms of his employment, he was required to reside, & did reside with his wife & family, in a house within the precincts of the hospital. In respect of his occupation of the house he was required to pay an annual sum comprising charges for rent, rates & hot water. The assessment to income tax, Sched. A., on the house was made on the county council & that body paid the tax & also the rates in respect of the house. The General Comrs. decided, on appeal, that, in the assessment of his remuneration to income tax under Sched. E., resp. was entitled to a deduction in respect of the annual sum paid by him. The Crown appealed on a stated case to the High Ct. When the case came before the King's Bench Div. it was intimated that resp. had come to the conclusion that he could not resist the Crown's appeal. On the second day of the hearing the action was settled without an order of the ct. on the terms that resp. should receive from the co. an agreed sum, counsel for the co. stating in ct., in announcing the terms of the settlement, that "the sum is a comprehensive sum; there are no costs on either side in the matter." The General Comrs., on appeal by resp. against an assessment to income tax, Sched. E., in respect of his emoluments from the co., reduced the assessment by the amount of the costs incurred by him:—Held: (1) the costs of the action were not necessarily incurred by resp. in the performance of the duties of his office so as to be deductible from his emoluments under rule 9 of Sched. E.; & (2) as, on the evidence before them the General Comrs. could not properly come to any other conclusion than that the sum received by resp. in settlement of the action did not include any amount in respect of his costs, the whole of the sum received was assessable.—*EAGLES v. On making payment of the pension, the High Comr., without applt.'s consent, deducted certain varying sums on account of the costs due by applt. to the Union Govt. in respect of an unsuccessful action which he had

ri. — Entertaining by Lieutenant-Governor.—Applt. declared his income as Lieutenant-Governor to be £ & claimed a deduction therefrom of £ expended for social entertainments, claiming that the latter amount was properly deductible as having been necessarily laid out for the purpose of earning the income:—Held: the expenses claimed as a deduction herein were not "wholly, exclusively & necessarily laid out or expended for the purpose of earning the income" within sect. 8 (a) of Income War Tax Act, 1917, as amended by 13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 52.—Re LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS SALARY, [1931] Ex. C. R. 232.—CAN.

brought against that Govt. in 1930. Owing to the rate of exchange between South Africa & the United Kingdom being at a premium, the gross pension payable for the year 1931-32 amounted to £268 (sterling). Applt. was assessed under Sched. E. for that year, in respect of his pension, in the sum of £229. On appeal, he contended that the assessment should be reduced by the amounts deducted by the High Comr. The General Comrs. decided that applt.'s pension was £229 (South African) per annum, that the sums deducted in respect of the costs were inadmissible as deductions in arriving at the assessment & that the assessment should be increased to £268 :—Held : General Comrs.' decision was correct.—*MAGRAW v. 539a. Personal allowance—In respect of wife—Whether earned income of wife included in husband's total income.]—THOMPSON v. BRUCE (1927), 11 Tax Cas. 607.

539b. ——— Husband entitled to deduction in respect of sums paid for maintenance.]—Resp., who was separated from his wife, wholly maintained her by the payment of an annual sum under a deed of separation approved by the ct. He claimed relief on the sum of £150, being the higher personal allowance provided by sect. 18 (1) Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18) (as amended). The Crown disputed his claim on the ground that the payments made by him for his wife's maintenance under the deed were annual payments deductible in computing his total income for the year of assessment. The General Comrs. allowed the claim. When the case came before the King's Bench Div., judgment was given, by consent, in favour of the Crown, but costs were withheld on the ground stated in the judgment.—CRADDOCK v. GREENWOOD (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 551.

Applt. was employed as assistant secretary to a limited co. whose superannuation fund had been approved by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue under 1921 Act, s. 32, & his annual contribution to the fund was therefore deducted as an expense in arriving at the net amount of his salary assessable to income tax. In the assessment one-sixth of the net amount was allowed as earned income relief, but applt. contended that one-sixth of his gross salary, before deducting the superannuation contribution, should be so allowed :—Held : earned income relief must be calculated on the net amount of remuneration assessable after deducting allowable expenses.—FRAME v. FARRAND (1928), 13 Tax Cas. 861.

540d. ———.]—Applt. made, under deduction of income tax, certain annual payments which were charged upon his total income. His income consisted of a salary & unearned income taxed at the source. The charges exceeded the taxed income. He claimed that in the assessment of his salary for the year 1927-28 he was entitled to an earned income allowance of one-sixth of the whole amount of his salary. He was given an allowance of one-sixth of the amount of his salary remaining after deducting from it the amount by which the charges exceeded the taxed income. The General Comrs. rejected his appeal on the point & he appealed to the High Ct. :—Held : the earned income allowance was rightly computed on the amount of salary remaining after deduction of the charges treated as paid out of it.—ADAMS v. MUSKER (1930), 15 Tax Cas. 413.

PART VII. SECT. 1.

536 ii. ——— Whether gross or net income under will.]—Held : applt.'s income under her father's will, for the purposes of a claim to repayment of income tax in respect of personal allowance, etc., was one-half only of the net income of the estate after the deduction of all prior charges, including the expenses of management of the trust.—MURRAY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1926), 11 Tax Cas. 135.—SCOT.

536 iii. ———.]—A beneficiary was entitled to income from (inter alia) two trusts, under one of which, after the expenses of the trust were paid, he was entitled to a life rent annuity of the whole residue of the estate; & under the other, after the expenses of the trust were paid, to (1) an annual sum, & (2) subject to a trust for accumulation for a particular purpose, the annual income of the estate during his life. The beneficiary, being a British subject resident abroad, was entitled to certain relief from British income tax under Finance Act, 1920, s. 24 (1) :—Held : in computing the "amount of his total income from all sources" for the purpose of this relief, the beneficiary was not entitled to include, along with the actual sums received by him from the trusts, the management expenses of the trusts.—MACFARLANE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1929] S. C. (Ct. of Sess.) 453.—SCOT.

536 iv. ——— Sums expended by trustees for benefit of taxpayer.]—Trustees in performance of duties as prescribed by a will paid out certain sums for taxes, water rates, insurance, coal & wages with respect to a residence occupied by testator's widow under the terms of the will. The "Minister" named in Income Tax Act, C. A., 1924, held that said sums were taxable income of the widow under said Act. On appeal :—Held : the Crown had not satisfied the onus which rests upon it in tax cases of showing that the Act applied to the sum in question.—Re NANTON, [1934] 3 W. W. R. 240; 42 Man. L. R. 461.—CAN.

540e. ———.]—Applt., a journalist & the owner & occupier of his residence, appealed against assessments made upon him under Sched. E. contending (inter alia), (a) that he was entitled to a deduction from the Scheds. A. & E. assessments in respect of expenses incurred by him in a law suit in connection with the purchase of his house, (b) he was entitled to relief (at the standard rate) in respect of the whole of the premium payable on a life insurance policy, although the premium exceeded one-sixth of his total income for each of the years in question, & (c) that in computing his earned income allowance no deduction should be made from his earnings in respect of the excess of mtge. interest & ground rent paid by him over the amount of the net Sched. A. assessment on his house. The General Comrs. decided against applt. on all points:—Held: the decision of the General Comrs. was correct — SMITH v. EDEN (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 110.

540f. ———. Deduction of annual payments—What amount to.]—Resp.'s mother by her will bequeathed certain shares in a limited co. to a bank to hold on trust & out of the income thereof &, if & so far as the income might be insufficient, out of the capital thereof, to pay an annuity to resp.'s sister. The bank had power to sell or mtge. the shares in whole or part in order to pay the annuity or to provide a capital fund to secure the annuity, provided that, if & so long as resp. should himself pay the annuity to his sister, the bank should permit him to receive any dividends on the shares & should not sell or dispose of the shares without his consent. No dividend was in fact paid on the shares in question at the material times & resp. paid the amount of the annuity out of his own moneys to the bank & the bank in turn paid the sum to the annuitant. Resp. claimed that, inasmuch as there was no contract or obligation on him to pay the annuity, the sums paid by him constituted voluntary payments which were not deductible in arriving at the amount of his income for income tax purposes on which earned income relief should be granted. The General Comrs. allowed his claim on appeal:—Held: the annuity was paid by resp. under the terms of the will & it was an annual payment to be deducted in arriving at the amount of his total income.—DEALER v. BRUCE (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 1, C. A.

540h. ———. In year of wife's death.]—The wife of applt. died in Oct. 1932, leaving him a widower with one child. Thereupon, a female relative of applt. resided with him to have the charge & care of the child. For the year of assessment to income tax 1932–33 applt. received the personal allowance as a married man under Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 18, in the assessment made on him under Sched. D. of 1918 Act:—Held: applt. was not also entitled to an allowance under Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 19, in respect of the female relative in the year 1932–33, the correct way to interpret sects. 18 & 19 being to regard them as mutually exclusive in their application to any one year of assessment.—ROSSI v. BLUNDEN, [1934] 1 K. B. 357; 103 L. J. K. B. 192; 150 L. T. 360; 50 T. L. R. 164; 78 Sol. Jo. 48; 18 Tax Cas. 328.

540j. ———. Claim by widow.]—Applt. was a widow who had no occupation. She had no female relative of herself or her deceased husband who was willing & able to act as her housekeeper, & for ten years she & a friend had lived together. Her friend, who was paid no salary but received board & lodging free, paid applt.'s accounts out of money supplied by applt. & was responsible (inter alia) for the control of the household expenditure, the engaging of servants & for the general direction of the affairs of the household. On appeal against the refusal of a claim to housekeeper allowance, applt. contended that throughout the material period the relation which subsisted between her friend & herself was that of housekeeper & mistress, & that this relation ought not to be regarded as affected by the fact that they were also friends. The General Comrs. found that the friend was not an employee & that the allowance was not permissible:—Held: there was ample evidence upon which the General Comrs. could arrive at their conclusion of fact that the friend was not employed by applt., who was accordingly not entitled to the allowance claimed.—MACFARLANE v. HUBERT (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 660.

540k. ———. Non-resident housekeeper.]—A widower, who had no female relative of his own, or of his deceased wife, able & willing to keep his house, had employed a female person for that purpose. This female person was a married woman, who did not reside with the widower, but with her husband. She attended daily at the widower's house for the purpose of housekeeping, had entire responsibility for all domestic duties & received £60 per annum with full pay & subsistence allowance for 28 days' holiday each year. The widower claimed an allowance from the gross amount of an assessment made upon him of £50 under Finance Act, 1924 (c. 21), s. 22, in respect of the services of a housekeeper:—Held: as the housekeeper was not resident with the widower, the allowance claimed was not permissible.—BROWN v. ADAMSON, [1937] 2 All E. R. 792; 53 T. L. R. 646; 81 Sol. Jo. 479; 21 Tax Cas. 186.

545e. Effect of power of appointment.—By a settlement made on the marriage of resp.’s parents, certain stocks, shares & securities were transferred to the trustees of the settlement upon trust to pay the income thereof to resp.’s mother for life &, after her death, to stand possessed of such stocks, shares, etc., & the income thereof, in trust for all, or such one or more exclusively of the others or other, of the issue (whether children or more remote) of the marriage at such times, in such shares & generally in such manner as the resp.’s parents should jointly appoint, &, in default of such appointment, as the survivor alone should appoint, &, failing & until such appointment, in trust for all the children of the marriage who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years of age or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under that age, in equal shares. On the death of resp.’s mother in 1913, the joint power of appointment had not been exercised & the whole of the income of the settled fund was accumulated until 1922, when the husband, as survivor, irrevocably appointed that the trustees should hold the fund & the income thereof in trust for the absolute benefit of his three children, all of whom were then infants) in equal shares. Resp. became of age in Dec. 1929, & preferred a claim under sect. 25 of 1918 Act, to repayment of tax paid on, or deducted in respect of, one-third of the income of the settled fund which had been accumulated for his benefit contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one. The General Comrs., on appeal, admitted the claim:—Held: the power of appointment under the settlement, while unexercised, did not affect income accumulated during the period of its non-exercise & did not take the claim out of the purview of sect. 25.—CHAMBERLAIN v. HAIG THOMAS (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 595.

545f. — Double contingency.—Resp.’s father, by a deed of settlement dated Dec. 29, 1915, vested in trustees certain funds in trust (inter alia) to hold the funds & accumulate the income thereof until his death, or until the youngest of his children attained the age of twenty-three, or until the trust funds should accumulate in value to a specified sum, if either of the latter events should happen prior to his death. Upon the occurrence of the earliest of these events the trustees were to divide & apply the free income, in whole or in part, as they might deem necessary, among his children equally. The deed further provided that, notwithstanding the direction to accumulate the income, the trustees should have power during the period of accumulation to pay to any one or more of the children, on attaining the age of twenty-three, the share of the income to which he or she would have been entitled on the occurrence of the earliest of the events above-mentioned. Resp., one of the three surviving children of the settlor, attained the age of twenty-three on July 28, 1929. At that date none of the three main contingencies provided for in the deed of settlement had happened &, in the exercise of the discretionary powers which the deed conferred upon them, the trustees had from that date paid to resp. a one-third share of the trust income. Resp. claimed, under sect. 25 of 1918 Act, repayment of the tax paid on one-third of the trust income accumulated for the period of fourteen & a half years to June 30, 1929, on the ground that income of the trust fund had accumulated for his benefit contingent upon his attaining a specified age within sect. 25. The General Comrs. allowed the claim:—Held: resp. was not entitled to the relief claimed.—DAIN v. MILLER (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 478.

545g. Lunacy percentage.—Under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), & the Rules in Lunacy, 1892, the Crown is in certain circumstances entitled to receive 4 per cent., but not exceeding £400, of the clear annual income of a lunatic. A., a lunatic, had a considerable income & the whole of the funds were in ct. The income as it came in was credited to the lunatic’s account by the Paymaster-General, & the appropriate lunacy percentage was debited annually in that account. Applt., the committee of A., was assessed under Case III. of Sched. D. for the year 1926–27 in the sum of £452, the amount of War Loan interest arising in 1925–26; the remainder of the lunatic’s income was received under deduction of income tax. Applt. claimed that a deduction of £161, the lunacy percentage for 1925–26 on the whole of the lunatic’s income, should be made from the assessment, on the grounds that the lunacy percentage did not form part of the lunatic’s income & that there was no authority for charging it to income tax. The Crown contended that there was no provision in the income tax Acts for allowing such a deduction, that the payment was merely an application of the lunatic’s income, or alternatively that the deduction from the assessment should be restricted to the percentage appropriate to that source of income:—Held: lunacy percentage is a payment out of the lunatic’s income, & that no deduction is admissible for income tax purposes.—A. B.’s COMMITTEE v. SIMPSON (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 29.

For a number of years the co. was indebted to the bank continuously. Interest on the amounts owing to the bank was debited half-yearly in the co.’s account with the bank &, except in one instance, the amount due to the bank increased each half-year. Resps. finally satisfied the whole indebtedness of the co. to the bank by a single payment, & they claimed repayment under sect. 36 of 1918 Act, in respect of so much of the amount paid by them to the bank as represented the interest which had been debited to the co.'s account:—Held: resps. were not entitled to the repayment claimed.—*HOLDER v. The Indian co. was a shareholder in two English cos., the profits of each of which had suffered United Kingdom taxation. The dividends received by the Indian co. from the two English cos. formed 44·12 per cent. of the total profits of the Indian co., & resp. contended that he was to be treated as having borne 44·12 per cent. of the tax upon the dividends received by him from the Indian co.:—Held: notwithstanding the fact that the tax upon dividends from foreign cos. depends upon Sched. D, Case V., & Misc. Rules, r. 1, the principle against double taxation applies to foreign cos. so as to exempt shareholders in foreign cos. from suffering double taxation. Resp. was, therefore, entitled to relief from taxation upon his dividends to the extent of 44·12 per cent. thereof.—BARNES v. HELY HUTCHINSON, [1938] 3 All E. R. 98; 159 L. T. 107; 54 T. L. The insured had in each year the option of taking the reduction of premium for that year in cash or of converting it into the equivalent reversionary bonus. The co.'s premium notice showed £48 5s. as the premium payable on the policy & £33 15s. 6d. as bonus, leaving £14 9s. 6d. as the "amount to be paid." Resp. remitted £14 9s. 6d. to the co. but claimed that the amount of the premium paid by him in the year was £48 5s.:—Held: the reduction of premium had been provided by the policy, that the amount of the premium paid by resp. was £14 9s. 6d., & that he was entitled to relief from income tax on that amount only.—*WATKINS v. income tax on so much as was earned by it in New Zealand & Australia, claimed relief from the double tax over a period of eight years ending on Apr. 5, 1924. The co. had issued debentures, the principal & interest of which were secured on its whole undertaking & assets, & in paying the interest on the debentures the co., as it was entitled to do, had deducted the full amount of United Kingdom income tax in respect of that interest. The sole question in dispute was whether the amount of relief was to be calculated on the whole of the profits earned by the co. in the Dominions or only on the balance of such profits remaining after deducting therefrom the excess of the interest paid by it on its debentures over the amount of income arising in the United Kingdom:—Held: (1) the word “income” in Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 27 (1), & the repealed sects. 43 of Finance Act, 1916 (c. 24), & 55 of Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), meant “taxable income” & not “income less charges,” & the word “paid” in relevant sections must be construed in its natural sense & not as meaning “paid & ultimately borne,” & therefore the co. was entitled to relief under Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 27, & corresponding sections of earlier Acts in respect of all income (including that part applied in paying debenture interest) which had already borne Dominion income tax; (2) Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 17, had no application to the relief given by any of above-mentioned Acts.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 557c. Deduction of interest on debentures in computing profits—Interest deducted in computing profits for Indian income tax.]—Applts., an English co., carried on business in Assam, & almost the whole of their income arose in India. That income was charged to British income tax, the profits so assessed being £186,750, but the same profits were assessed to income tax in India at £129,365, the difference being due to the fact that in India debenture interest was allowed as a deduction, whereas in the United Kingdom this deduction was not allowed. Applts. claimed relief based on £186,750, contending that though the Indian assessment was only at the figure of £129,365 it was an assessment on the whole of the profits of £186,750:—Held: applts. were only entitled to relief on the £129,365.—ASSAM RAILWAYS & TRADING CO., LTD. v. then for the purpose of computing the amount in respect of which relief from United Kingdom income tax is granted by sect. 27 (1) of Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), the amounts of the assessable income in respect of these profits in the two countries must be ascertained & relief be granted on the whole or such part of the assessable income in the United Kingdom as is equal in amount to the assessable income in the Dominion without regard to difference of allowances or deductions for expenses made in the two countries in arriving at the assessable income. Where a sum paid by the co. in respect of debenture interest is, under the law of the Dominion, excluded from the assessable income, but the co. pays the income tax in respect of it as agent for the debenture-holders, relief must be granted on the amount of the debenture interest so paid without regard to how the tax on that interest is ultimately borne.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 557e. Royalty payable in Colony—Consequential exemption from colonial income tax.]—In 1897 applt. co., whose registered office is in London & whose trade is carried on in Ashanti, entered into an agreement with the Governor of the Gold Coast Colony, whereby the co. enjoyed certain rights on conditions which included the payment to the Treasurer of the Gold Coast Colony of a yearly royalty of five per cent. of its gross receipts from certain metals, precious stones & oils. In 1901, by an Order in Council, Ashanti was placed under the jurisdiction of the Governor of the Gold Coast Colony, who was empowered to legislate by Ordinance for Ashanti. By an Ordinance of 1903 a tax, admitted to be a “Dominion income tax” for the purposes of sect. 27 of Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), was imposed in Ashanti on holders of concessions, a duty of five per cent. being charged on their annual profits therefrom. The Ordinance, which is now incorporated in the Laws of Ashanti, expressly exempted applt. co. from the tax. It was stated in evidence that this exemption was given because of the payment which the co. was already making under the agreement of 1897. The co. claimed relief in respect of the payment of Dominion income tax under sect. 27 of Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), contending that the so-called royalty payable under the 1897 agreement must be considered as being in the nature of a tax or duty, & that so much of it as was equivalent to duty assessed under the 1903 Ordinance was a tax corresponding to United Kingdom income tax payable by the co. under the law in force in Ashanti:—Held: the royalty payable under the agreement of 1897 was not a “Dominion income tax” within sect. 28 (8) (c) of Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), & the co. was accordingly not entitled to the relief claimed.—ASHANTI GOLDFIELDS CORPN., LTD. v. under Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 27, in respect of such double income tax was admitted. For the same year resp. had also suffered double super-tax, & he claimed relief in respect of such double super-tax:—Held: although the relief from income tax granted by sect. 27 could not be interpreted to include super-tax, the effect of the arrangements contained in the Relief in respect of Double Taxation (Irish Free State) Declaration, 1923, was to allow relief from income tax, including super-tax, & resp. was entitled to the relief claimed.—MCCALMONT v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1938] 3 All E. R. 174; 82 Sol. Jo. 522, C. A.

The beneficiaries were all capax & resident in this country. Testator held £40,000 & per cent. War Stock, the interest on which was payable without deduction of tax. The interest due on June 1, & paid to the trustees on that date, amounting to £1,000, was treated by them as capital, & estate duty was paid thereon. The trustees, having been assessed to income tax on the £1,000 of interest, contended that trustees acting for behoof of a British resident who was capax were not assessable to income tax. The Comrs. decided that the trustees were assessable as regarded the two-thirds of the interest effecting to the portions destined to the testator's wife & daughter in life rent, but not as regarded the one-third payable by them to the son:—Held: the trustees were assessable to tax on the whole interest, under Rule 1 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to Sched. D.—KEIN'S TRUSTEES v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1929] S. C. 439; 14 Tax Cas. 512.—SCOT.

k v. —.— "Income accumulating."—Held: the word "accumulating" used with the word "income" in sect. 11 (2) of Income War Tax Act, 1917, & Amendments, is there used gerundially, that is as a verbal noun rather than as a verb; it is used just to earmark it as the fund for unascertained persons or persons with contingent interest & which is taxable in the hands of the trustee.—*McLEOD v. Such income accumulating in trust is distinctly a subject of taxation under s. 3 (6), regardless of the residence, if ascertainable, of probable beneficiaries, whose interest is contingent during the taxation period.—MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE v. ROYAL TRUST CO., [1931] S. C. R. 485; 3 D. L. R. 474.—CAN.

Appl., a resident in Canada, was the sole surviving trustee under the will of a Canadian, who died in 1914. 569b. Liability of executor—Agreement by deceased to pay composition for penalties.—Following upon an investigation, it was agreed between representatives of the Inland Revenue & of a taxpayer that, by reason of under-statements of his income in his returns for tax purposes, he had underpaid income tax & super tax for past years to the extent of £10,134, of which only a small part was within date for assessment & was assessed. He had also rendered himself liable under the provisions of the Income Tax Acts to penalties amounting to approximately £10,113. He paid £4,193 on account & entered into an agreement in writing with the Comrs. of Inland Revenue to pay a further £10,000 in settlement. Before any part of that sum had been paid, however, he died & his exor., deft. co., after paying a sum in respect of the duties which were assessed, declined to pay the balance, contending, inter alia, that the Comrs. of Inland Revenue had no authority to enter into the agreement, & that it was only liable for such sums as were assessed. The opinion of the ct. was sought, on a special case stated by consent, to determine whether payment of the outstanding balance could be enforced from deft. co. as exor.:—Held: (1) the doctrine actio personalis moritur cum persona had no application to the case inasmuch as it was an action on a contract & not on a tort; (2) there was consideration for the agreement; (3) sect. 140 (1) of 1918 Act, did not, in the circumstances of the case, operate in any way to prevent a claim for penalties being made; (4) it was competent for the Comrs. of Inland Revenue to accept a sum in composition for penalties incurred under the Income Tax Acts even though proceedings had not been commenced for their recovery.—A.-G. v. MIDLAND BANK EXECUTOR & TRUSTEE CO., LTD. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 136.

Rules to the Income Tax Act, 1918:—Held: (1) the income of testator's wife "arose or accrued" to him within the meaning of the rule & must be included in the income to be so assessed, this being a question of assessment & collection & not of computation; (2) the executrix was assessable in respect of the profits & gains so arising or accruing to the testator before the year of assessment & not only of those arising or accruing to him during the year of assessment; (3) the said profits which arose to testator de die in diem from the commencement of the year of assessment up to the time of his death in that year were apportionable.—PALMER v. 569e. Liability of receiver.—A co. issued first debentures which provided that it charged with payment of the money thereby secured its undertaking & property, & that at any time after the principal money became payable the registered holder might with the concurrence of the holders of a majority in value of the debentures appoint a receiver of the property charged, who should have power to take possession of the property, to carry on or concur in carrying on the business of the co., to sell, & to make any arrangement or compromise. The co. afterwards issued second debentures containing provisions similar to those above mentioned & further expressly providing that a receiver appointed thereunder should be deemed to be the agent of the co., which should be solely responsible for his acts, defaults, & remuneration, & that these debentures were constituted a floating security. The holders of the first debentures appointed a receiver, & the holders of the second debentures afterwards appointed the same person to be receiver on their behalf. The co., through the receiver, paid off the first debentures:—Held: even if there was no succession by the receiver to the business of the co., the receiver, whether under the first or the second debentures, was the person "receiving or entitled to the income" of the co.'s property & business within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1918, Sched. D., Miscellaneous Rules, r. 1, during his receivership & was therefore assessable to income tax in respect of that income during such period; further, there was no succession by the receiver to the business of the co. within the contemplation of Sched. D., Rules applicable to Cases I. and II., rr. 9, 11, or at all.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. THOMPSON, [1937] 1 K. B. 290; [1936] 2 All E. R. 651; 105 L. J. K. B. 643; 155 L. T. 252; 80 Sol. advisable to the support, maintenance, & education of each of testator's three children until they attained respectively twenty-five years of age, or until the period of distribution; any portion of any child's share not required for the above purpose was to be reinvested & form part of the residue bequeathed to that child; after the death or remarriage of testator's wife, the residue of the estate was to be equally divided between such of the three children as should attain the above age, the share of any child who died before the period of distribution to be taken by his child or children:—Held: under sect. 11 (2) of the revised statute surplus income accumulating under the above provision of the will was taxable in the hands of the appellant irrespective of whether the children or any of them were resident in Canada; but the whole surplus income did not form an indivisible taxable integer, as there were three distinct trusts, the income under each of which should be separately assessed.—HOLDEN v. MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE, [1933] A. C. 526; 102 L. J. P. C. 115; 149 L. T. 315, P. C.—CAN.

573a. Although not resident in England.—A lady on her marriage in 1925 went with her husband to Egypt where he carried on business & their permanent home was there. Every year she passed four & a half to five & a half months in England in order to escape the hot season in Egypt, & her husband also passed from two to four months in England during her yearly visit there. She owned certain War Loan stock, & assessments to income tax in respect of the interest thereon were made upon her for the years 1925–26 to 1929–30. She appealed against these assessments to the Comrs. on the ground that they had been made upon her in disregard of proviso (1) to rule 16 of Income Tax Act, 1918, General Rules. The appeal was argued on the footing that her husband was not resident in this country. The Comrs., without expressing any opinion as to the lady's residence for the first two years, found that she was resident in the United Kingdom from the year 1927–28 onwards, but decided that the assessments were wrongly made upon her. On appeal to the High Ct. by the inspector of taxes:—Held: notwithstanding the assumption that her husband was resident in Egypt & the finding that she herself was resident in this country, the lady was "a married woman living with her husband" within rule 16, proviso (1), & consequently the assessments upon her were wrong & should be discharged.—*BROWNING v. 573b. Husband not resident in United Kingdom.—Appl., a partner in a firm of cotton brokers in Egypt, appealed against assessments made upon him by the Additional Comrs. of Income Tax in Liverpool in respect of War Loan, bank, & other interest received by his wife. The wife, who was ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, had been held to be a married woman living with her husband, within the meaning of rule 16 of the General Rules of the Act of 1918, during the whole period of assessment. The husband was not resident in this country, he carried on no trade, profession, employment or vocation here, but he had paid short visits to the United Kingdom during each of the years for which assessments were made, & was at some time during each of those years at the offices of certain chartered accountants at 309, India Buildings, Water Street, Liverpool. The assessments appealed against were made upon him as at that address. For appl. it was contended that Miscellaneous r. 4 applied only to persons resident in the United Kingdom, & was exhaustive as to the place of assessment, & that the Income Tax Acts failed to provide any machinery for assessment in the particular circumstances of the case:—Held: 1918 Act, s. 102 (3), drew a clear distinction between a person who was "in" the parish & a person who "resided" in the parish; when that subject was read in conjunction with rule 4 (5), of the Miscellaneous Rules it was clear that persons who were not resident in the United Kingdom were liable to assessment whenever they came into the country, & the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.—DUCK-

570 i. Liability of married woman to be charged—Married woman living in United Kingdom separate from husband—Income from property out of United Kingdom.—The wife of a professor at Cairo University received annually a share of income from Canadian property, which was held by a body of Scottish trustees. Until 1922 she lived with her husband in Cairo, & accompanied him to England on furlough for three months every summer. During the furlough in 1922 the state of her health necessitated her removal to a nursing home, where she remained throughout the financial year 1923–24. The professor returned to Cairo at the end of his leave in 1923, visiting this country again the following summer. For the year 1923–24 the trustees were assessed to income tax upon the wife's share of Canadian income:—Held: the income was liable to be charged to income tax upon the wife, & was not to be deemed to be the husband's profits.—DERRY v. INLAND REVENUE, [1927] S. C. 714; 13 Tax Cas. 30.—SCOT.

Britain & elsewhere, they undertaking to pay her a percentage of the published price of the novels as royalties:—Held: since her facilities were employed within the Union both in writing the novels & in dealing with her publishers, the source of the income was in the Union & the royalties had rightly been included in the taxable income of her husband.—MILLIN v. INLAND REVENUE COMR., [1928] App. D. 207.—S. AF.

571 iii. — Income of wife—How assessed.—Held: proviso (1) of rule 16 of the General Rules applicable to all Scheds. of the Income Tax Act, 1918, applies not merely for purposes of collection, but for all income tax purposes. The income of a married woman living with her husband must be assessed, measured, or computed as one entity, as if she were sole & unmarried. The properly assessable income of the wife as an individual must be ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the Income Tax Acts before the husband can be finally assessed & charged; the charge is upon the husband as a result of assessment of the joint taxable income of husband & wife.—*MULVEY v. 573c. — Three years' average—Wife's pre-nuptial income from foreign possessions.]—Applt. was assessed to income tax, & under the provisions of rule 16 of the All Scheds. Rules to the Income Tax Act, 1918, his wife's income was deemed to be his, & was included in his assessment. In computing the wife's income her income in the year preceding the year of assessment acquired before she married applt. was included:—Held: there was nothing in rule 16 to make the computation of the income of a married woman different from that of a feme sole. The operation of the proviso to rule 16, whereby that income was deemed to be that of her husband, was for the purposes only of assessment & charge to income tax.—ELMHIRST v. 573d. — Necessity for application for separate assessment.]—Additional assessments under Sched. A. for the years 1927–28 to 1932–33, inclusive, were made on applt. in Mar. 1933, in respect of the annual value of the house in which he & his wife resided, which was owned by his wife, who was at all material times the rated occupier. No formal application for separate assessment under General Rule 17 had been made within the prescribed time limit for any of the years in question. On appeal, applt. contended (a) that the assessments had been made upon him in contravention of rule 1 of No. VII. of Sched. A. since he was not, & never had been, the occupier, (b) that, as the house was part of his wife's separate estate, the assessments should have been made upon her, & (c) that, as the assessments had then only recently been made, formal applications for separate assessment could not have been made for any year within the prescribed time limit. The General Comrs. decided that, as applications had not been made for separate assessment for any of the years in question within the prescribed time limit, the assessments had been correctly made on applt.:—Held: the General Comrs.' decision was correct.—SHORTT v. YALLOP (1936), 20 Tax Cas. 298.

575a. Income payable to or for benefit of infant—Income applicable in paying premiums on educational endowment policy.]—The father of a young girl conveyed a sum of stock to appls. as trustees, & directed them to take out an educational endowment policy for such sum as could be insured for an annual payment of £30 for his daughter, the endowment to begin on her attaining the age of fifteen, & to continue for four years. The income of the trust fund was dedicated to the payment of the annual premiums. The trust further directed appls. to utilise the educational endowment payable under the policy & any other income available from the trust fund for the education & advancement of his daughter from the time when she became fifteen until her majority. If the daughter attained the age of twenty-one the capital of the trust fund was to be made over to her absolutely, but if she died before, the fund to revert to the trustor or his representatives. The trust deed contained no gift of income to the daughter. While the daughter was still under fifteen appls., on her behalf, claimed repayment of income tax deducted at the source from a sum of £33, the annual income of the stock, on the ground that that income was the income of the daughter for income tax purposes, & that, as she had no other income of her own, she was within the limit of total exemption:—Held: the daughter had no present beneficial right to receive the income & the claim failed.—DEWAR v. 575b i. Income payable to or for benefit of infant—Under revocable disposition—Annuity payable "for some period less than the life of the child"—What amounts to.]—The father of two minor children, by an inter vivos deed of trust, directed his trustees to apply the free annual income from certain trust funds for the benefit of his children until the youngest should attain majority. On that event, the estate was to be paid over to the children then surviving, unless the trustees deemed it inadvisable to do so or the trustor disapproved, in which case the trustees were to continue the payment of income. On the trustor's death the estate was to be paid over to the children then surviving, unless the trustor's wife, if then alive, should desire a further postponement of the period of division. A clause in the deed also declared that, in the event of a child marrying a non-Jew without its parents' approval, that child should forfeit the provisions in its favour. While the trustor's children were still in minority & unmarried, claims were made on their behalf for repayment of income tax upon the trust income falling to them:—Held: on a sound construction of Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20 (1) (c), & its provisos, the trust income was applicable for the benefit of the trustor's children for a period less than their lives, in respect that their enjoyment of the income was restricted to the period before the youngest child attained majority & depended upon their not incurring forfeiture by contracting an unapproved marriage, & also that their right to the capital was not absolute, but only contingent; & accordingly, the trust income fell to be treated as income of the trustor, & claim for repayment of tax disallowed.—LEVITT v. INLAND REVENUE, [1932] S. C. 629; 17 Tax Cas. 719.—SCOT.

ad. Transfer to wife in fulfilment of marriage contract whether transfer to evade taxation.]—By his marriage contract entered into on Mar. 28, 1913, wherein separation as to property was stipulated, M., resident in Montreal, P.Q., made to his future wife a donation inter vivos of the sum of $20,000. By a deed made on Mar. 23, 1925, the said M. in fulfilment of the conditions of his marriage contract with respect to the said donation, transferred & conveyed to his wife certain shares of the capital stock of various corps., the wife accepting such shares in full payment of the sum of $20,000. The returns of income he made for the years 1925 to 1931 inclusive omitted the income derived from these shares. He died on Apr. 9, 1932. On Apr. 11, 1933, the Comr. of Income Tax sent notices of assessment to one of the exors. of the will of the said M., assessing the dividends paid on such shares between Mar. 23, 1925, & Dec. 31, 1931:—Held: the conveyance made by M. to his wife was not a transfer to evade taxation; it was made in fulfilment of his marriage contract & from the date of transfer he had no further interest in the shares transferred to his wife & was no longer liable to taxation on the income derived therefrom.—MOLSON & NATIONAL TRUST CO., LTD. v. to apply the annuity for the son's maintenance, education & benefit, to accumulate any sum not so applied, & to resort at any time to the accumulations & apply them as if they were current income. The father by the deed reserved to himself a power of revocation exercisable with the consent of one of five named persons, which power he had not yet exercised. It was admitted that the limitation for the joint lives was the same for the purposes of Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20, as if the limitation had been for the benefit of the beneficiary for life:—Held: sums so paid were, within sect. 20 (1), income of the son payable during his lifetime, & not for a less period, notwithstanding the power of revocation. That power did not limit the interest for a less period than the life of the child, as the limitation was in fact for the life of the child, subject to a power enabling that limitation to be set aside, but that did not prevent the limitation whilst it lasted from being for the life of the child, & that view was confirmed by the contrast between the provisions of subsect. 1 (c) & subsect. 1 (a) of sect. 20. Consequently the trustees were entitled on his behalf to relief from & repayment of income tax paid by his father in respect of instalments of the annuity.—WIGGINS v. WATSON'S TRUSTEES, [1934] A. The period between the date when the obligation to make the first payment arose & the date when the last payment would fall due was less than six years. Resps. claimed repayment of income tax:—Held: as the duration of the payments did not exceed six years the income was to be deemed the income of the subscriber, & the resps. were not entitled under 1918 Act, s. 37 (1), to repayment of the tax.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. James Harris died Jan. 1, 1929, & by his will, after providing for certain specific legacies, bequeathed the residue of his estate to the exors. named therein upon certain trusts, to pay income therefrom to his wife & children & distribute the corpus to his children on certain conditions. After the death of James Harris, as well as in his lifetime, applt. had no assets other than the securities assigned to it by him & the dividends from these securities constitute the only income applt. receives; this income is immediately turned over to the estate which pays all expenses. Applt. co. is controlled by the exors. & trustees named in the will of James Harris. Applt. from the date of incorporation & for five years after the death of James Harris, was assessed as a personal corpn. for income tax. In 1935 applt. was assessed as an ordinary corpn., the assessment being confirmed by the Minister of National Revenue, from which decision applt. appealed:—Held: applt. co. continued to be a personal corpn. for income tax purposes after the death of James Harris.—*PORT CREDIT REALTY, LTD. v. of seven years in annual amounts decreasing in value from £5,800 to £700, such sums to be the net amount after deduction of tax. Upon this, three questions were raised: (a) whether the payments were capital payments or income payments, (b) whether the deed was made for valuable & sufficient consideration, & (c) whether these sums payable under the deed were within the meaning of the words "any income" in Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20 (1) (b).—Held: (1) the payments were income payments; (2) the Comrs. having found as a fact that the deed was not entered into for valuable & sufficient consideration, that was a finding of fact which they were entitled to make & with which the Ct. would not interfere; (3) the only sum which could be said to come within the meaning of the words "any income" in Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20 (1) (b), which, by the sect., had to be applicable for the benefit of a person other than the person by whom the disposition was made for the period of seven years, was the minimum sum of £700.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 576d. — Income from foreign trust.—Applt., by deed executed in 1922, assigned certain property to an American trustee upon trust (inter alia) to pay the net income to herself & her husband in equal shares during their joint lives. The deed contained a power of revocation & modification & applt., acting under this power, modified the provisions of the deed from time to time directing the trustee (inter alia) to make payment of irrevocable annuities to her children & other persons. In 1924, applt. relinquished, until Jan. 1, 1929, the power to revoke or recall to herself the trust estate or to modify the terms of the trust deed relating to her husband's interest except with the husband's consent. In 1929, applt., with the written consent of the beneficiaries, revoked the trust & by a separate deed, dated Apr. 25, 1929, transferred the trust estate to an American trust co., declaring trusts which provided for the payment of annuities to each of three persons named in the deed, as a charge on the whole fund, & for the payment to applt. & her husband of the annual sum of £6,000 each. This deed contained a power of revocation & modification which, to the extent that its exercise might infringe the rights of the three named annuitants was exercisable only with their written consent, but it was declared that revocations which should leave assets in the trust sufficient, in the judgment of the trustee, amply to assure payment of the annuities should not be deemed to infringe such rights. It was agreed that, subject to the determination of the question raised on the appeal, applt. was liable to income tax, under r. 2 of Case V. of Sched. D., only on remittances of income from the settlements to Great Britain, the law applicable to the trust being similar to the law of the State of New York in the case of Garland v. Archer-Shee. The Crown contended that by the exercise of the power of revocation contained in the trust deeds, applt. could, without the consent of any other person, except her husband, obtain for herself the beneficial enjoyment of the whole income arising from the assets comprising the trust funds (except the sums required to meet the irrevocable annuities); that that income must, therefore, under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20 (1) (a), be deemed to be income of applt., & that applt. was assessable to income tax in respect of the whole income arising from the stocks, shares & securities comprising the trust funds, less the amount of the irrevocable annuities. The Special Comrs., on appeal, upheld the Crown's contentions.—Held: (1) sect. 20 (1) (a) did not operate to bring within the charge to income tax any income not within the ambit of the Income Tax Acts; (2) having regard to the whole of the documents the consent of the trustee certainly, & possibly of the annuitants, was necessary before applt. could obtain for herself the beneficial enjoyment of the income of the trust estate by means of revocation.—ORMONDE v. BROWN (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 333.

By a clause in the settlement power was reserved to the beneficiary at any time during his life by deed to revoke the settlement or to change or modify it as he might think fit. It was agreed for the purposes of the case: (a) that the settlement was to be governed by the law of the foreign country; (b) that on a proper construction of the settlement under that law the beneficiary had no proprietary interest, legal or equitable, in either the corpus of the trust or the dividends or interest received by the trustees, that the whole legal & equitable proprietary interest therein was vested in the trustees, & that the sole right of the beneficiary was a right in equity to enforce performance of the trust by the trustees; (c) that by the foreign law the power of revocation reserved by the settlement was valid, but that until it was exercised it had no effect on the nature of the rights of the trustees & beneficiary respectively.—Held: as from the date of the settlement the beneficiary was assessable to income tax under Sched. D., Case V., rule 2, on the amount received in the United Kingdom, & not under rule 1 of that Case, for the whole income of the trust fund was not to be deemed to be his income under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20 (1) (a).—*ASTOR v. 576f. Person transferring assets abroad—Avoidance of tax—Burden of proof of intention.—Deceased, a Canadian by birth & domicile, who had been for some years before his death resident in the United Kingdom, became, apart from occasional lucid intervals, incapable of managing his own affairs. In 1933, with a view to protecting his property against dissipation by himself, deceased executed a settlement under which he would be unable to deal with his assets in any way. No question of taxation was considered or discussed at that time, but subsequently, & admittedly for the purpose of avoiding United Kingdom taxation, the assets of the deceased, consisting of shares in an English co., were sold to a Canadian co. (expressly formed for the purpose) in return for shares & non-interest bearing debentures in the Canadian co. The whole of these shares & debentures were by further settlements transferred to the trustees of the original settlement. Deceased died in Jan. 1936. It was held by the Income Tax Comrs. that the transfer of the shares in the English co. to the Canadian co. was made for the main purpose of avoiding taxation, within sect. 18 of Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), & therefore the exors. of deceased were liable to be assessed to sur-tax on the estimated amount of deceased's income for the year 1935-36. The exors. appealed, contending that in order to arrive at the main purpose of the transactions the ct. must look at the "transfer & any associated operations" as a whole, & that the transfer of the assets was merely part of the machinery by which the main purpose of protecting the property was effected:—Held: (1) on the true construction of sect. 18 (1) of the Act of 1936 it was necessary for the taxpayer, in order to escape liability to tax, to show that both the transfer & any associated operations were effected mainly for some purpose other than the purpose of avoiding liability to taxation, & on the admitted facts the finding of the Comrs. was right & the appeal must be dismissed; (2) para. 4 of the Second Sched. of the Act of 1936 incorporated all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts as to assessments, by sub-sect. (7) of sect. 18 the Act of 1936 was made retroactive as to liability to sur-tax, & that therefore under General Rule 18 of Income Tax Act, 1918, the assessment was rightly made on the exors. of deceased.—*COTTINGHAM'S EXORS. v. 581 i. Time for making claim—Whether claim out of time—Relief in respect of United Kingdom income tax.—The provision in sect. 51 of the Bechuanaland Protectorate Income Tax Proclamation, 1922, that no refund of an amount paid in excess of the amount chargeable under the Proclamation may be authorised unless the claim therefor is made within two years after the date when the payment was made, does not apply to a claim by an assessee to recover relief to which he is entitled under sect. 17 (2) of the Proclamation in respect of income tax payable in the United Kingdom, because under sect. 17 (1), income is to be assessed without any deduction for income tax there payable. Further, the language of sect. 51, in providing that the collector "may" authorise a refund, is inappropriate in the case of an assessee claiming under sect. 17 (2), a legal right which the collector has no discretion to refuse.—*RHODESIA RAILWAYS, LTD. v. sh. Death before dividends & interest payable—Apportionment Act inapplicable to claim for repayment.—A taxpayer, whose total income was such as to entitle her to repayment of all income tax deducted from it, died before certain of the dividends & interest upon her investments fell due. Her exors. afterwards received payment of these dividends & interest under deduction of tax, & founding on the terms of the Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35), s. 2, claimed repayment of tax proportionate to the period of her survival:—Held: the Apportionment Act had no application to the question in dispute, & as the dividends & interest payable after the taxpayer's death never formed part of her income, her exors. were not entitled to repayment of any portion of the income tax deducted therefrom.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. life & that on her death his trustees should convert the residue into cash & distribute it among six named beneficiaries. Testator died, domiciled in Scotland, in 1903. The widow claimed her legal rights under Scottish law. She was accordingly paid a capital sum out of testator's movable estate & continued, up to the time of this case, to receive from the trustees one-third of the rents derived from the heritage. The remaining two-thirds of the rents were accumulated by the trustees for a period of twenty-one years when further accumulation became unlawful. Thereafter, in accordance with settled Scottish law, the two-thirds rents were paid by the trustees to the heir-at-law in heritage for the time being of testator. The curator bonis to the heir-at-law in heritage, a minor, claimed repayment of the income tax charged in respect of the amounts paid to him as curator, contending that those amounts represented income of the minor in his hands:—Held: the payments made to or for behoof of the minor were payments of income.—*DUNCAN v. 585b. Sum claimed already allowed as deduction.—Appld. co. habitually financed its purchase by loans from its bankers repayable on demand; the loans were for no specified period, but were paid off with interest when the co. received payment for the goods, usually within three months. The interest was paid without deduction of income tax, & was debited in the co.'s profit & loss account as a business expense. It had been allowed as such in computing the profits on which the co. was assessed under Case I. of Sched. D. for the four years ended Apr. 5, 1925. The co. claimed repayment of tax under 1918 Act, s. 36, for these four years on the interest paid to the bank, contending that it should not have been allowed as a deduction in computing profits, that this error could be corrected by additional assessments, & that the interest must be treated as having been paid out of profits or gains brought into charge to tax. The Comrs. of Inland Revenue refused the claim, & on appeal the Special Comrs. upheld this decision:—Held: as in fact the interest had been deducted in arriving at the assessable profits, it had not been paid out of profits brought into charge to tax, & that it was not open to the co. to claim revision of the assessments.—MULLER & CO. LONDON, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 116.

practice.]—Appl't. co., which held a number of railway wagons on hire purchase agreements, was assessed to income tax, Sched. D., for the years 1923–24 to 1928–29 inclusive, in certain sums returned for the purposes of assessment. In arriving thereat the deduction allowed in respect of the hire element (as distinct from the capital element) in the payments made under the hire purchase agreements was calculated on what is known as the "average" or "even spread" basis. As from 1929–30 an increased deduction computed by an alternative method, known as the "actuarial" basis, was admitted, in accordance with a decision of the Special Comrs. in another case, & the co. sought a like deduction for the years 1924–25 to 1928–29, inclusive, by way of a claim to repayment under Finance Act, 1923 (c. 14), s. 24, on the ground that the assessments for these years were excessive by reason of an error or mistake in the returns or statements made by it for assessment purposes. The claim was rejected by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue under sect. 24 (2) on the ground that the assessments were made according to the practice generally prevailing at the time when the co.'s returns or statements were made. The Special Comrs., on appeal, accepted the evidence given by two inspectors of taxes that the basis generally followed during the years in question was that adopted by the co. & refused the claim:—Held: no point of law arose in connection with the computation of the co.'s profits & gains within the proviso to sect. 24 (5).—*ROSE SMITH & CO., LTD. v. His successor discovered this error & additional assessments were made on the trustees in respect of the above income:—Held: the inspector, who was treated as if he were the first inspector, had "discovered," within sect. 125 (1) of 1918 Act, that profits chargeable to tax had "been omitted" from the first assessments within the meaning of sect. 125 (1) of 1918 Act, notwithstanding his failure to discover it at the time of the first assessments, & subsequently, the Comrs. had power to make the additional assessments.—WILLIAMS v. GRUNDY TRUSTEES, [1934] 1 K. B. 524; 103 L. J. K. B. 204; 150 L. T. 378; 18 Tax Cas. 271.

By Finance Act, 1930, Sched. I., Part I, the assessors were bound in the year 1930 to being in the certificates of their assessments of annual values on Nov. 30, 1930. Certain property was at that time empty & was not occupied until Jan. 31, 1931. On Aug. 30, 1930, the tenant agreed to continue his tenancy for one quarter from Dec. 25, 1930, at a rent of £100 for the quarter. On Apr. 24, 1931, the property was let for a term of 21 years

In 1925 the Comr. made a new assessment & fixed the value at £46,835:—Held: the only sect. under which the Comr. can alter

Upon discovering these facts the Comrs. made an additional assessment under 1918 Act, s. 125:—Held: the additional assessment was properly made.—*KLIMAN v. STONE, HILLS v. 592f. Personal allowance—Married man—Marriage annulled.—In 1921, a marriage between resp. & K. R., spinster, was solemnised. From 1921 to 1932, resp. having declared in the income tax returns made by him that he had his wife living with him or that his wife was wholly maintained by him during the years of assessment, was granted the statutory allowances applicable to a married man during those years. In 1933, resp. obtained a decree of nullity of the marriage by reason of the incapacity of his wife to consummate the marriage. In 1934, on the application of the inspector of taxes, additional assessments were made under sect. 125 of 1918 Act, on that portion of the personal allowance obtained by resp. in each of the five years ending & including 1932–33 in excess of the personal allowance which would have been due to resp. if he had been an unmarried man. The General Comrs. discharged the additional assessments, holding that for the purposes of income tax assessment the marriage of resp. subsisted until the decree of nullity was made final & that the personal allowances which had been granted to resps. had been rightly granted:—Held: (1) a marriage which was null on the ground of the incapacity of one of the spouses was voidable & not void; but when the decree of nullity made it void, it was void ab initio. It was not, however, void for all purposes. Transactions which had been concluded & things which had been done during the period of the supposed marriage, could not be undone or reopened after the marriage had been declared null & void; (2) Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 18, ought to be read as applying to a wife who was de facto a wife living with her husband & whose marriage had not yet been avoided; (3) the Revenue authorities had no power to make fresh assessments on resp. with reference to the years 1928 & following years by reason of a fact which came into existence after those years. In this case the fact which came into existence after the years of assessment was resp.'s decision to exercise his option to avoid the marriage. Therefore the additional assessments were rightly discharged by the General Comrs. & the appeal must be dismissed.—DODWORTH v. DALE, [1936] 2 K. B. 503; [1936] 2 All E. R. 440; 105 L. J. K. 595a. Absence of accountant's certificate.—Appls. delivered to the inspector of taxes balance sheets & trading & profit & loss accounts of their business covering the period of three years, on the average profits of which their Sched. D. liability was to be computed; they also delivered to the assessor of taxes a statement showing the average profits to be £1,447 after making the adjustments required for income tax purposes. The inspector asked that the accounts should be certified by a qualified accountant in view of their magnitude, & appls. refused on the ground that there was no statutory authority for such a requirement. In due course the statement & accounts were laid before the Additional Comrs., who, not being satisfied, made an assessment of £2,000, against which appls. appealed. On the hearing of the appeal the General Comrs. were of opinion that examination of the books as proposed by appls. would occupy them for several weeks, & even then would not enable them to establish the correctness of the accounts because they were not professional accountants. The Comrs. accordingly, not being satisfied on the evidence tendered that the assessment was excessive, decided to confirm it unless within two months appls. should produce accounts audited by a qualified auditor. Appls. expressed dissatisfaction with the Comrs.' decision as being erroneous in point of law & required them to state a case:—Held: the Comrs.' decision was not ultra vires.—HUNT & CO. v. JOLY (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 165.

595b. Assessments under Sched. A.—Applt. was owner & occupier of premises, purchased by him in July 1932, which were rated at £60 (gross) for the years ended Mar. 31, 1933, & Mar. 31, 1934, & £54 (gross) for the year ended Mar. 31, 1935. On appeal against assessments under Sched. A. of £60 (gross) on the premises for each of the years 1932–33, 1933–34 & 1934–35, applt. contended that the annual value of the premises was not greater in the two years ended Apr. 5, 1934, than in the year ended Apr. 5, 1935, & that the assessment for each year should be reduced to £54. The General Comrs. confirmed the assessments for the years 1932–33 & 1933–34 & reduced the assessment for the year 1934–35 to £54:—Held: the General Comrs. were entitled to decide that the assessments for the years 1932–33 & 1933–34 had been rightly made.—*DENNY v. Division, where he had resided since Sept. 1928. He had claimed & was allowed relief in respect of his children in the assessments thus made upon him. In 1931, the inspector of taxes discovered that the trustees of applt.'s ante-nuptial contract of marriage, in exercise of their discretion under the contract to pay income to & for behoof of the children, had paid to applt. considerable sums for the maintenance, etc., of the children. The sums so paid by the trustees exceeded the limits of income laid down in Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), s. 21 (3). Additional assessments for the years 1924–25 to 1929–30 inclusive, which had the effect of cancelling the relief in respect of the children, were made on applt. by the General Comrs. for the H. Division. He appealed to the Special Comrs., contending (a) that the rights of the children under the contract were contingent & that the sums paid by the trustees were not income of the children in their own right; & (b) that, as regards the assessments for 1924–25 to 1928–29, the H. Comrs. had no jurisdiction to make the assessments. The Special Comrs. decided (a) that the assessments were good in law & that the H. Comrs. had jurisdiction to make them; & (b) that they had no jurisdiction to determine the question whether applt. had received allowances in respect of his children to which he was not entitled, & adjourned the appeals for that question to be decided by the H. Comrs.

In the second case, applt., in the first case (together with the Public Trustee) was trustee of a will, under the trusts of which applt.'s children, in the events which happened, were entitled in equal shares to income from certain War Stock. The income had been paid over by the Public Trustee to applt. without deduction of tax. On discovery of these facts, assessments were made in 1931 on the trustees for the years 1924–25 to 1929–30 inclusive by the General Comrs. for the H. Division. The trustees appealed to the Special Comrs. contending that (a) they were not residing in the H. Division during the years up to & including 1928–29 & the General Comrs. for that Division had no jurisdiction to make assessments on them for these years; & (b) that all the assessments were bad in law & that there was no power to make assessments upon the trustees jointly in the Division where only one of the parties assessed resided. The Special Comrs. confirmed the assessments:—Held: (1) the income, when it was paid over to the children, was income of the children, & applt. was not therefore entitled to relief in respect of the children; (2) the Special Comrs. had jurisdiction to determine the questions in issue on the claim to relief when raised on appeal against an assessment under sect. 125; & (3) the additional assessments made in the H. Division were not bad in law; (4) the appeal failed.—JOHNSTONE TRUST SETTLEMENT v. CHAMBERLAIN (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 706.

597b. Notice of appeal—Withdrawal.—Notice of appeal to the Special Comrs. was given by a taxpayer who subsequently gave notice that he withdrew the appeal:—Held: the appeal could not be withdrawn without the consent of the Special Comrs., since, when the notice of appeal was given, it became their duty to arrive at the true assessment, an appeal against an assessment under 1918 Act, being on a different basis from an appeal in private litigation.—*R. v. 602a. Duty to determine value—Effect of valuation under section 138.—Resp. was the owner of certain premises in Leeds, & when the annual value of the premises was being assessed for purposes of income tax chargeable on them under Sched. A, a dispute arose in consequence of which resp., under sect. 138, asked that a valuation should be made by a person of skill. II. was appointed to make the valuation, & it was claimed that the valuation should have been higher & was wrong, as H. admitted he considered that sect. 138, set aside any necessity for him in his valuation to have regard to the rules under Sched. A. for ascertaining the annual value of the premises, & he made his valuation without regard to his knowledge of the rents paid:—Held: any valuation by a person of skill appointed to value premises for income tax purposes under sect. 138 did not take the place of the determination of the value to be made by the Comrs. whose duty it was to hear & determine an appeal against an assessment, & in the course of that determination power was given to them to appoint a person of skill; the annual value was to be determined not

The appeal proceedings before the General Comrs. were twice adjourned for the production by applt. of further information & on the occasion of the second adjournment applt. was warned that when the case was next put down for hearing he must be prepared to attend in person with a statement of the facts & arguments which he wished to submit to the Comrs. On the third hearing of the case applt. did not attend & his representative asked for a further adjournment. This the Comrs. refused. Applt.'s representative then gave a general statement of facts, under the reservation that he was not to be bound by any particular statement of fact, & contended that no liability to income tax arose in respect of the sum in question. In consideration that applt. had failed to submit facts or evidence to them, the General Comrs. dismissed the appeal & confirmed the assessment:—Held: the Comrs. had acted within their powers.—*HAMILTON (J.) v. 607a. — Disagreement between landlord & tenant as to deduction.]—A building leased by pltf. to defts. was assessed to income tax (Sched. A.) on the rent. Under sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1930 (c. 28), the sum upon which the tax was calculated was reduced on the ground that parts of the building were empty during the year of assessment, & defts. paid tax on the reduced rent. Defts. in paying rent deducted the tax calculated on the original rent, pltf. claiming that it should have been calculated on the reduced rent. The difference having arisen defts. referred it to the General Comrs. of the division, under the provisions of r. 22 (1) (a) of the All Sched. The Comrs. of Income Tax found that the expenditure so incurred by resps. was of a nature similar to ordinary dredging, & therefore such expenditure was an admissible deduction in computing the resps.' profits, which were liable to taxation under Sched. D. :—Held : the finding of the Comrs. meant that the money expended was money exclusively laid out & expended for the purpose of the trade or business, & they clearly indicated what their holding was upon the facts; therefore they decided a question of fact & not a question of law, & the ct. could Comrs. considered that having regard to the continuance of regular & lengthy visits to the United Kingdom the circumstances were different from those previously under consideration in relation to the year 1924-25, & they held she was resident & ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom. She appealed:—Held: the matter was a question of fact & the Comrs.' decision could not be disturbed as being erroneous in point of law.—KINLOCH v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 736.

620a. —.—]—A co. which had succeeded to the business of a previous co. in 1920 was assessed to income tax, Sched. D., for the year 1923-24 in an estimated amount to represent the average profits of the three preceding years. It gave notice of appeal against this assessment, & subsequently claimed relief under r. 11 of the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D. The Inspector of Taxes opposed the claim. The co. gave notice of appeal to the Special Comrs. against the refusal to admit the claim, & eventually the case was set down for hearing by the Special Comrs. both on the r. 11 claim & on a question of obsolescence. Before the date fixed for the hearing the co. withdrew the appeal & the withdrawal was accepted by the Special Comrs. Subsequently, the co. applied to the General Comrs. to hear & determine its claim contending that the claim made by it fell under r. 3 (3) of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to Sched. D., & that only the General Comrs. had power to determine it.

6171. When case may be stated—Rehearing by Board of Referees not condition precedent.—Held: (1) it is open to any party to appeal by way of stated case to the High Ct. against a decision of the Special Comrs. on appeal to them under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), Sched. I., para. 1, against a direction issued under sect. 21 (1) of that Act, & a rehearing of the appeal by the Board of Referees under para. 2 of the Sched. is not a condition precedent to the statement of a case for the High Ct.; (2) it is not necessary for the Special Comrs. to be satisfied that there has been an intention to evade super tax before a direction can be made under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21; (3) in both cases there was evidence to justify the Special Comrs.' determination in confirming the directions.—CARLAW (DAVID) & SONS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1926] S. C. 870; 11 Tax Cas. 96.—SCOT.

PART IX. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.—C.

621 i. When prohibition lies—To prohibit rehearing.—A co. limited by guarantee & having its registered office in County Antrim claimed exemption from income tax on the ground that it was established for charitable purposes only. The claim was refused by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue &, on appeal, by the Special Comrs. sitting at Belfast. The co. thereupon required that its claim should be reheard by the Deputy Recorder of Belfast before whom, at a preliminary hearing, it contended that the decision in the case of H. v. Recorder of Belfast (Ex parte Kelly), 18 Tax Cas. 586, related only to claims for repayment of tax under sect. 36 of 1918 Act, & sect. 202 of 1918 Act was applicable to a claim for exemption on charitable grounds. The Deputy Recorder decided that he had jurisdiction to rehear the appeal, whereupon the Comrs. of Inland Revenue obtained from the High Ct. of Northern Ireland (King's Bench Div.) a conditional Order of Prohibition directed to the Deputy Recorder prohibiting him from hearing the appeal:—Held: making the conditional order absolute, the Deputy Recorder had no jurisdiction to re-hear the appeal.—R. v. BELFAST DEPUTY RECORDER, Ex p. LINEN INDUSTRY RESEARCH ASSOCN. (1937), 21 Tax Cas. 108.—IR.

623 i. Where case will be remitted—Where method of assessment is wrong.—Appl., the sole proprietor of a business, returned the profits of the business for the purposes of assessment to income tax under Sched. D. for the year 1932-33 as £233 & claimed an allowance of £10 for wear & tear of plant. He was assessed for that year in the sum of £400, & appealed against the assessment. In support of his appeal, he lodged a trading & profit & loss account for the year to May 31, 1931, & a balance sheet at that date. According to the trading & profit & loss account the profit amounted to £233, in arriving at which nothing was charged for depreciation of assets. In the balance sheet there was deducted from the capital at the beginning of the year £276 for "drawings" & to the balance was added the profit of £233, & out a reduced figure for at the end of the year. In the sheet a sum of £10 was written

The General Comrs. were of opinion that the claim was made by way of appeal under r. 11 & that the Special Comrs. had jurisdiction to deal with it. They refused to hear the claim. The co. obtained a rule nisi calling upon the General Comrs. to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to hear & determine the claim:—Held: the rule should be discharged.—R. v. WEST GORTON GENERAL COMRS., Ex p. BROOKS & DOXEY (1920), Ltd. (1931), 16 Tax Cas. 210.

628a. —.—]—Certain premises were leased to tenants for a term of seven years from Nov. 17, 1925, at a rent of £125 per annum by a lease dated Nov. 10, 1925. By a deed dated Nov. 11, 1925, the tenants agreed, in consideration of the owner undertaking to execute certain alterations & repairs, to pay, from the date of completion of the alterations, & for the remaining period of the lease, an additional £125 per annum. The additional £125 per annum was described as "rent." The owner, resp. in the present case, contended that it represented repayment by instalments of the tenants' obligation to him. The premises were assessed for the purposes of Sched. A for the year off plant as depreciation. The General Comrs. decided, as a matter of fact, that applt.'s assessable profits for the year 1932-33 were £345 & reduced the assessment accordingly:—Held: the General Comrs. had indicated no evidence as ground for their finding that applt.'s assessable profits were £345 & that the case should be remitted to the Comrs. to reconsider the assessment.—*ANDERSON v. o iii. —.—]—To compel commissioner to state a case—Not on new points of law.—Held: where an assessee seeks for a mandamus from the High Ct. against the Comr. of Income Tax requiring him to state a case on points of law different from those he had argued before the Comr. to state a case, his application cannot be entertained.—A. K. A. C. T. V. CHETTYAR FIRM v. INCOME TAX COMR. (1928), 1 L. R. 6 Ran. 492.—IND.

1926-27 in the amount of £250. The General Comrs. on appeal reduced the assessment to £125. The Crown appealed. The case was remitted to the General Comrs. for further findings & was subsequently settled by agreement.—THORNLEY v. BROWN (1929), 15 Tax Cas. 459, C. A.

629a. — Discretion of court.—Under 1918 Act, s. 149, it is within the discretion of the High Ct. to remit a case to the Comrs. for re-hearing & decision without requiring that it be amended & returned for the decision of the ct. itself.—*EDWARDS v. 629b. — Incomplete finding as to residence—Failure of commissioners to comply with directions of court—Consent of Crown to dismissal of appeal.—Estimated assessments were made upon resp. for the years 1923-24 & 1924-25 in respect of literary profits, & she appealed against them on the ground, inter alia, that she was not resident in the United Kingdom. She was not present at the hearing of the appeal nor was any evidence called on her behalf, & an adjournment was therefore applied for on behalf of the Crown. The General Comrs. refused the application & found, on statements made by her representative, that she was "resident abroad," not that she was not resident in the United Kingdom, " & that the income was earned abroad." When the case first came before the K. B. Div. it was remitted to the Comrs. to hear evidence for the purpose of ascertaining "facts as to the residence of the resp. in the United Kingdom & whether the income accrued in the United Kingdom or not." The Comrs., however, after the rehearing of the appeal at which resp. was present, found only that she was "resident abroad," & that her profession was "exercised abroad," except as regards the three articles written in this country. On the case again coming before the K. B. Div., the A.-G. pointed out that the Comrs. had not complied with the directions of the ct. as to the form of their finding as regards residence, but said that, while he could not admit that on the facts proved the Crown were wrong in taking the view that resp. was resident in the United Kingdom, he would not, in all the circumstances, ask for the case to be again remitted & would consent to the appeal being dismissed.—FARRAND v. SATTERTHWAITE (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 470.

631a. Notice requiring commissioners to state & sign case—Must be in writing—Oral application to commissioners insufficient.—1918 Act, s. 149 (1), lays down the following rules to be observed in applying for a case stated, after the hearing by comrs. of an appeal against income tax assessment: (a) immediately after the determination, applt. or surveyor, if dissatisfied with it as being erroneous in law, may declare his dissatisfaction to the comrs.; (b) having declared his dissatisfaction, he may within twenty-one days, by notice in writing addressed to their clerk, require the comrs. to state & sign a case:—Held: the notice in writing to the clerk to the comrs. referred to in sect. 149 (1) (b), is a condition precedent, & if this condition is not satisfied, the comrs. have no jurisdiction to state a case.—R. v. INCOME TAX COMRS. FOR EDMONTON, Ex p. THOMPSON, [1929] 1 K. B. 220; 98 L. J. K. B. 201; 140 L. T. 380; 45 T. L. R. 91; sub nom. R. v. EDMONTON INCOME TAX COMRS., Ex p. THOMSON, 14 Tax Cas. 313, D. 632a. Transmission of case after "receiving" same.—After stating a case the comrs. sent it to the office of the person requiring it, the surveyor of taxes, at the office occupied by the latter at the time the appeal was before them, the address of which was on all the official documents in the appeal. The surveyor had left the office in the interval & gone to another one:—Held: the case had been "received" by the surveyor within 1918 Act, s. 149 (1) (d).—GRAINGER v. SINGER, [1927] 2 K. B. 505; 96 L. J. K. B. 917; 137 L. T. 692; 43 T. L. R. 591; 11 Tax Cas. 704.

632b. Exchanging points of argument.—(1) It is not necessary to exchange points of argument, but either party may, not later than ten days before the argument, give to the other party notice in writing of any point intended to be made which would be likely to take the other party by surprise, in default of which the ct. may adjourn the argument on such terms as may be just.

(2) A case may be set down by either party subject to the same conditions in all respects as cases have heretofore been set down by the party at whose instance they have been stated.—PRACTICE NOTE, [1926] W. N. 250.

sy. Jurisdiction of Recorder to re-hear appeal.—A resident in county Down, who carried on business in Belfast & elsewhere, claimed repayment of Income tax under sect. 36 of 1918 Act, & sect. 19 of Finance Act, 1925 (c. 36), on the ground that he had paid interest to a bank in Belfast out of profits or gains charged to income tax in Belfast. The claim was refused by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue &, on appeal, by the Special Comrs. sitting at Belfast. The claimant thereupon required that his appeal should be re-heard by the Recorder of Belfast before whom, at a preliminary hearing, he contended that the effect of sect. 19 (3) of Finance Act, 1925 (c. 36), was to make applicable to his claim the provisions of sects. 195 & 196 of 1918 Act, & thus give the Recorder jurisdiction to re-hear the appeal. The Comrs. of Inland Revenue contended that the Recorder had no such jurisdiction, the only right of appeal against the determination of the Special Comrs. under sect. 19 of Finance Act, 1925, being by way of case stated to the High Ct. &, alternatively, that, even if such an appeal lay under sect. 196, there was in this case no "assessment made" within the meaning of that sect. at a place within the Recorder's jurisdiction. The Recorder decided that he had jurisdiction to re-hear the appeal, whereupon the Comrs. of Inland Revenue obtained from the High Ct. of Northern Ireland a conditional order of prohibition directed to the Recorder forbidding him to hear the appeal:—Held: making the conditional order absolute, the Recorder of Belfast had no jurisdiction to re-hear the appeal.—*R. v. The only essential difference between sect. 138 & the previous legislation is that the verification on oath is now at the option of the Comrs.; & the only matter which the person of skill can be required to deliver on oath is the verification of his valuation; &, in so doing, he cannot be required to justify or explain the means whereby he arrived at his conclusion.—*LYONS v. COLLINS, [1937] 1 K. The first demand note in respect of the instalment in question had been issued on June 12. The magistrate dismissed the case on the ground that the period of six months within which the proceedings should have been commenced ran from June 12:—Held: proceedings could be commenced within six months from July 1.—*MANN v. ## Part X.—Penal Provisions.

642a. ——— Survivorship.]—Deceased had incurred liabilities to the inland revenue in respect of incorrect statements made in his returns for income tax for the years ending Apr. 5, 1932, & Apr. 5, 1933. No proceedings were taken against him during his lifetime, but proceedings were commenced against his executrix on July 26, 1937. The question was whether the cause of action in such a case by virtue of Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 1 (1), was made to survive against the estate of the deceased, & whether such proceedings were in respect of a cause of action in tort within the meaning of sect. 1 (3) of that Act:—Held: (1) the cause of action survived against the estate of deceased under sect. 1 (1) of the Act of 1934; (2) it was not a cause of action

The exor.'s year expired on Apr. 11, 1931, when the legacy of £1,000,000 became payable & thenceforth in law carried interest at 4 per cent. per annum on each part of it as was for the time being unpaid. Testator's estate was at all material times sufficient to enable interest to be paid on the legacy. In Apr. 1932, resp., acting on the advice of his accountant, decided to allow the question of interest to stand over, & he had not at any material time received any sum in respect of interest. Resp. was assessed to sur tax in the sum of £50,180 for the year ending Apr. 5, 1933, which included a sum of £40,000, representing interest at 4 per cent. on the legacy of £1,000,000:—Held: as resp. had not received any of the interest there was no income in respect of it on which he could be charged to tax.—*DEWAR v. 656c. Sale of shares cum dividend—Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 33—Exemption from liability—“Exceptional” avoidance.—A co. with a capital of £4,000, divided into 3,900 preference shares of £1 each & 1,000 ordinary shares of 2s. each, was in 1933 in a position to declare out of profits accumulated before July 5, 1932, a dividend of £100 on each ordinary share. Applt., who held the preference shares & all but forty of the ordinary shares admittedly avoided sur tax by selling all but five of his ordinary shares at £75 each, to about forty persons, with the promise, which he could fulfil by exercising his voting rights in respect of the preference shares, that the co. would declare a dividend. Many of the purchasers were employees of the co., & did not pay the purchase money till they received the dividends amounting to £75, £100 less income tax £25, which were immediately declared. Applt. having been assessed to sur tax on the amount of the dividends as assets within Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 33:—Held: though the dividends were assets falling into charge under that section, applt. escaped under the proviso to subsect. (4) in that the avoidance was “exceptional & not systematic.” Those words refer primarily to number, & a single act of avoidance does not cease to be exceptional because it is planned or designed, nor because it is carried out by a number of sales.—*BILSLAND v. All the ordinary shares were held by one of the directors. The debentures, all of which were issued to this shareholder, were redeemable at one month's notice by the co. at any time, & at one month's notice by the holder after May 25, 1920. On Apr. 16, 1920, the whole of the £150,000 due on the debentures was paid by the co. to the holder, interest being waived by him, & the co. thereupon borrowed £72,500 from him at 6 per cent. interest, a liability reduced to £33,117 by June 30, 1920:—Held: the debentures constituted a capital receipt in the hands of the shareholder, & he was not assessable to super tax for the year 1920–21 in respect of the amount of the debentures.—WHITMORE v. 666. For the existing paragraph substitute the following paragraph:—

Distribution of profits—Assets of company written up—Loans to directors written off.—A partnership business was converted into a limited co. in 1916, practically the whole of the shares therein being held by two resps., the original partners, who were brothers, & were also the governing directors. The accounts showed profits of £117,000 for the three years ending Dec. 1919, but no dividends were declared or paid. The co., having power to lend money, granted loans amounting to £283,000 to resps. at 5 per cent. interest, against which the capital assets were increased in value by £226,000 & profits drawn upon to the extent of £57,000. The actual cash lent was mainly provided by a bank overdraft. At a later date resps. duly passed resolutions purporting to cancel the debt of £283,000 by writing it off against the general reserve fund. Resps. having been assessed to super tax upon £283,000 :—Held : (1) the loans were genuine loans, which gave rise to no liability to super tax, even if cancelled, except as to the £57,000 taken from profit & loss account; (2) the purported release of the debt was wholly invalid & ineffectual, & resps. remained liable to the co. to repay the whole amount of the £283,000 but were not liable for any super tax thereon.—HALL v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1920), 135 L. T. 759; 11 Tax Cas. 24, C. A.

666a. Transfer of assets to subsidiary company—In consideration of shares—Distribution to shareholders in parent company.—A colliery co. which had accumulated large reserves transferred certain of its assets, comprising land & houses, freehold minerals, railway wagons & outside investments, to a subsidiary co. formed in order to take over the assets. The consideration for the transfer was to be satisfied by the allotment to the parent co. of shares in the subsidiary co. The parent co. declared bonuses on its own shares to be satisfied by the issue to its shareholders of the shares to which it was entitled in the subsidiary co. & those shares were, in fact, allotted direct by the subsidiary co. to the shareholders in the parent co. The transaction was shown in the books of the parent co. by the transfer to the balance of profit & loss account of the balances standing to the credit of reserve & other accounts, & the distribution of bonus shares was recorded as having been made out of the balance of profit & loss account. The original shareholders in the subsidiary co. were identical with those in the parent co. The first directors of the subsidiary co. were the directors of the parent co. &, with one exception, the directors of the two cos. were the same throughout. It was the intention of the directors of the parent co. to retain under their control the assets transferred to the subsidiary co. & the two cos. were to a large extent inter-dependent, the parent co. being partially dependent on the subsidiary co. for finance. Applt. & his wife, as holders of shares in the parent co., received a distribution of shares in the subsidiary co. & an amount representing the value of the shares plus an appropriate addition for income tax was included in an assessment to super-tax made upon applt. The Special Comrs. on appeal held that the distribution was a release by the parent co. of assets to its shareholders & that to the extent to which the distribution represented a distribution of current or accumulated profits it was income assessable to super-tax :—Held : that the Special Comrs.' decision was correct.—BRIGGS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1932) 17 Tax Cas. 11.

666b. Distribution of shares in another company—Acquired out of accumulated profits.—A public limited co. promoted & registered a subsidiary co., subscribing in cash for the whole of its issued share capital, which was held by nominees of the parent co. The whole of the shares in the parent co. were subsequently purchased by a third co. under an agreement which provided that part of the consideration should be the assignment to the existing shareholders in the parent co. of the shares in the subsidiary co. & of a debt due by the subsidiary to the parent, in satisfaction of which a further issue of shares was made by the subsidiary. Under the authority of an extraordinary resolution of the parent co. the shares in the subsidiary, which were declared to be capital assets of the parent in excess of liabilities & paid up share capital, were distributed, in specie, among the shareholders of the parent co. in proportion to their respective holdings. Applt. was assessed to super tax in an estimated figure to cover the value of shares so distributed to him to the extent that they had been acquired by the parent co. out of accumulated profits. He appealed to the Special Comrs., contending that the distribution was a distribution of capital. The Special Comrs. held that to the extent that the shares distributed to applt. were acquired by the parent co. out of its accumulated profits they represented income liable to super tax in applt.'s hands :—Held : the Special Comrs.' decision on the point argued before them was correct, without prejudice, however, to the position which would arise in a case where shares acquired out of accumulated profits were required in the balance sheet to answer share capital.—WILKINSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1931), 16 Tax Cas. 52.

667a. Annual percentage of profits on sale of dental practice.—On Sept. 28, 1932, resp. entered into an agreement to purchase the practice of a dentist in Wimpole Street, London. Clause 3 stated that the primary price to be paid by the purchaser should be £15,000, which sum should be subject to increase or diminish as thereafter provided. Under clause 4, £5,000 was to be paid on the exchange of the agreement & applt. was to pay to the vendor in respect of the balance of the purchase price each year for ten years from Aug. 16, 1932, 25 per cent. of the net profits of the practice, such sums to be paid to the vendor as capital sums paid in respect of the purchase price, & if the aggregate paid during the ten years should amount to more or less than £10,000 the primary price of

r. 1. — Issue of bonus debentures.—An investment co., carrying on business in India, capitalised its accumulated undistributed profits & issued to its shareholders bonus debentures, which were subsequently redeemed :—Held : the shareholders did not, as the result of those transactions, receive any taxable income, profits or gains within sect. 4 of Indian Income Tax Act, 1922.

The personal motive or purpose of the individual shareholders, even if they hold a controlling interest in the co. is irrelevant, if it is made out that the co. has in fact capitalised the accumulated profits.—INCOME TAX COMR. BENGAL v. MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LTD., [1936] A. C. 478; [1936] 2 All E. R. 857; 105 L. J. P. O. 102; 155 L. T. 186; 52 T. L. R. 574 80 Sol. Jo. 593, P. C.—IND.

£15,000 should be increased or diminished accordingly. Clause 5 charged the balance of the purchase price for the time being remaining payable on the goodwill assets or profits of the practice into whosoever hands the same might come, which, with the personal covenant of the purchaser thereof, was the primary security therefor, & £5,000, part of the £10,000, was additionally secured by a mortgage of a policy which should be assigned by the purchaser to the vendor to be reassigned as soon as the vendor had received the £5,000. No provision was made for the event of the death of, or the discontinuance of the practice by the purchaser, in either of which cases therefore the £15,000 would neither be increased nor diminished. Resp. claimed to deduct, in making a return of the income for super tax purposes, £886 payable by him under the agreement for the tax year in question. The Special Comrs. held that he was entitled to make that deduction as the £886 was of the nature of income & not a capital sum. On July 25, 1935, FINLAY, J., confirmed their decision:—Held: the question to be determined was whether, under the terms of the particular agreement in question, the consideration for the purchase was a sum of money, though payable in instalments, or whether it was an annuity. Under the agreement the sum of £15,000 was made the purchase price from beginning to end, & the mere fact that in the result the amount paid might be greater or less than what was called the primary price did not alter the legal position; a definite purchase price was being dealt with by the agreement. Therefore the instalments were not annuities, but merely the method & the manner & the form in which a lump sum was paid; accordingly the £886 could not be deemed income, but was capital & not deductible from income for tax purposes.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 668a. — Part retained by trustees—For payment of death duties.—Appl't's first husband, by his trust disposition & settlement, gave the whole of his property, real & personal, to trustees for payment of his debts, except those heritably secured on his real estate, his funeral expenses, & the management expenses of the trust, any legacies he might leave, & an annuity to a niece, & subject thereto, in the events which happened, the trustees were to hold the whole of his property on trust to pay out of the free income thereof an annuity to his sister, & subject to the implement of all prior purposes of the trust, the trustees were, as soon as convenient after his death, to convey all his lands & estates to appl't. in life-rent during her life, with remainders over to a series of heirs, & to hold the whole of the residue of his property in trust for her in life-rent during her life & on her death to the person then entitled to the landed estate in fee. In addition to all powers competent to them by statute or common law, testator conferred on his trustees all powers of administration competent to a fee simple proprietor, & in particular, power to sell any part of his property & to grant leases of any part of the heritable property. On the death of testator in 1919, heavy death duties became payable on the heritable estates, which were already heavily mortgaged. The trustees elected to pay the duties by sixteen half-yearly instalments, of which the earliest were met out of the proceeds of sale of testator's stocks & shares. Pending the realisation of such part of the heritable estates as, after necessary reductions of the charges thereon, would be sufficient to meet the remaining instalments, the trustees retained the estates & the management thereof in their own hands, & paid appl't. only the free annual income. On the footing that she was entitled to the life-rent of the estates from the date of her husband's death, appl't. was assessed to super tax for the year 1923–24 on the whole annual value of the estates as assessed to income tax, Sched. A., for the previous year, & this assessment was upheld by the Special Comrs. on appeal:—Held: appl't. was assessable to super tax for the year 1923–24 only on the amount of the free income actually receivable by her from the trustees for the preceding year, the trustees & not appl't. being owners of the estates for the purposes of Sched. A. for that year.—DE ROBECK (LADY) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 13 Tax Cas. 345, H. L.

668b. — During minority.—Appl't's grandfather left a share of his estate in trust for his son, appl't's father, for life & after the father's death in trust for the issue of the father in such shares & on such conditions as the father should appoint: in default of appointment, in trust for those children equally who should attain the age of twenty-one. The father died in 1919. His will exercised the power of appointment mentioned above & provided, inter alia, that the property settled by the will of the grandfather should on the father's death be divided into as many shares as he should have children surviving him, & that each child's share should be held by trustees on trust to pay the income to the child for twenty years from the father's death & after that period, if the child survived, to transfer the corpus to him absolutely. As the result of Chancery proceedings with reference to the father's will the ct. ordered, inter alia, that a certain sum per annum should be paid to the guardian of appl't. out of the income of his share in the grandfather's estate, for his maintenance during minority. It was contended that this amount only should be brought into the computation of appl't's liability to super-tax:—Held: the income of the share of the estate appropriated to appl't. was all income of appl't. for super-tax purposes.—*STERN v. Partnership—Payments to widow of deceased partner—For use of firm name.]—A partnership deed provided that in the event of death of a partner the remaining partners might continue to use the firm's name, marks, & goodwill, paying to the exors. of the deceased partner for this privilege the sum of £500 quarterly for a period of five years, "after which it may be enjoyed without further payment." One of the partners died, leaving one-half of his residuary estate in trust for his widow, applt. The value of deceased's share in the capital & income of the partnership was agreed & paid to the exors. in full discharge of all claims except the quarterly payments. These payments were duly made, at first in full, but later under deduction of income tax. Applt. was assessed to super tax for the year 1926-27 in respect of her half share of the four quarterly payments received in 1925-26 :—Held: the payments were income assessable to super tax.—MACKINTOSH v. 671a. Loans to controlling shareholder of private company—No dividends declared.]—Applt.* was the controlling shareholder of five private limited cos. From time to time he withdrew from the business of each of the cos. sums which he used to finance the purchase in his own name of premises to be occupied by himself trading as a firm. The sums so withdrawn were described in the cos.' accounts as "loans" to applt. trading as such firm. Each of the cos. had power to advance money on loan, with or without security, but, while in some cases the loans shown in the accounts to have been made to applt. were subsequently approved formally in general meeting, no previous formal authorisation was given for any of the loans. The loans were not secured by any document,

& no provision was made as to repayment or interest thereon. None of the cos. ever declared a dividend for any of the years material to the case. The Special Comrs. decided that the loans in question had not been made in the course of the businesses carried on by the cos., & that they were not genuine loans but constituted income of applt. for the purposes of super tax :—Held: there was ample evidence before the Comrs. to support their conclusion of fact.—JACOBS v. sd. Loan to associated company.]—The Hong Kong Trust Corp., Ltd., lent money to the Bombay Trust Corp., Ltd., & the latter paid interest thereon. In respect of this interest the Hong Kong co. was assessed to income tax in the name of the Bombay co., as its agent under Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, ss. 42 (1), & 43, & such assessment was held good on appeal to the Privy Council. The loan was paid off through a common banker & a new loan from Arnold & Co. in China was substituted for it. All these cos., including the bankers, were closely associated cos. & their share capitals were held almost exclusively by one family. The income tax authorities at Bombay disbelieving the reality of the transactions continued to assess the Hong Kong co. in the name of the Bombay co. as its agent :—Held: all the evidence went to show that the transaction by which the lender was charged was a real one & as the tax authorities were unable to prove the contrary by evidence the assessment was invalid & must be discharged.—INCOME TAX COMR., BOMBAY PRESIDENCY & ADEN v. BOMBAY TRUST CORPN., LTD., [1936] 2 All E. R. 1679, P. C.—IND.

st. Payment for liberty to withdraw support—Whether "easement." ]—Resp.* was the proprietor of the surface & subjacent strata, other than the coal, of certain lands. In 1900 resp.'s predecessor entered into an agreement with the owner of the coal & the co. working the coal which provided that, in consideration of the payment of one penny upon every ton of coal or dross raised, the coal owner & the co. should be entitled to work the coal & lower the surface & also to make below the surface, in the strata belonging to the surface owner, any underground roads, accesses or communications necessary for the convenient working of the coal. The coal owner & the co. were bound to compensate the surface owner & his tenants & fears for all damage caused directly or indirectly by the working of the coal. On appeal against an assessment to sur-tax for the year 1934-35 which included the sum paid to him (under deduction of income tax) by the colliery co. in respect of coal raised in that year, resp. contended (inter alia) (a) that the advantage of working coal free from interruption by the surface owner conferred by the agreement of 1900 did not create any easement or privilege in, over or derived from land, & that sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1934 (c. 32), did not apply to the payments made under that agreement; (b) that no part of the payments was referable to wayleaves, & (c) alternatively, that such part only of the payments as was referable to wayleaves should be included in the assessment. It was agreed that, if the payments were apportionable, they might fairly be apportioned as to 7/40ths to wayleaves & as to 33/40ths to the other working rights. The Special Comrs. decided that sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1934 (c. 32), did not apply to 33/40ths of the payments & that 7/40ths only thereof should be included in the assessment :—Held: the payments made in respect of the right to lower the surface were payments of rent in respect of an "easement" within sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1934, & accordingly the whole of the payments under the agreement fell to be included in the assessment to sur-tax on resp.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. shares in a private co. into the joint names of himself & his wife, & that in the meantime & until such transfer was completed he would himself hold the said shares upon trust. By his direction a trustee account in respect of these shares was opened in the books of the co., & the dividends on the shares were paid into that account & accumulated. A draft deed of trust had been submitted to applt. for his approval in Jan. 1917, but owing to various circumstances could not be finally completed until Apr. 1919:—Held: the parol declaration of trust was not an immediate & complete declaration of trust, but merely the declaration of an intention on the part of applt. to settle the shares & of his intention meanwhile to keep them in medio so that they might be ready when the trust was effectively declared. There was no effective trust declared of the income of these shares in Feb. 1917, & it remained the income of applt. up to the time when the deed was executed.—ALLAN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1925), 133 L. T. 9; sub nom. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ALLAN, 9 Tax Cas. 234, H. L.

673b. Income received by executor before assent to legacy.—Under the will of his father, who died in Aug. 1921, resp. was entitled to a specific legacy of certain shares in two cos. Owing to difficulties in administration the exors. did not assent to the legacy until June, 1924, & in the meantime dividends had been declared upon the shares in Feb. & Aug. 1923, & in Mar. 1924, which dividends were retained by the exors. until their assent in June, 1924. Resp. was assessed to super tax upon these dividends for the years ending Apr. 5, 1924, & Apr. 5, 1925, respectively, on the basis that they were his income for the years when such dividends were payable by the cos. Resp. contended that as he was not in a position to require payment of the dividends from the exors. until June, 1924, they were not his income or receivable by him until then, & that he was wrongly assessed:—Held: the doctrine of relation of the exor.'s assent to the date of the death applied, & resp. was rightly assessed.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 673c. Income from share of residue—When residue ascertained.—Applt. on attaining the age of twenty-five became entitled to a quarter share in the capital & income of the residue of his father's estate, which consisted mainly of real property heavily mtged. The will provided that the property was to be divided when the youngest child attained twenty-five, which happened in 1916, & not before, & that until then the exors. & trustees should apply the surplus income, after payment of legacies, annuities, etc., in reduction of the mtge. debts. In fact the exors. did not divide the property & continued, from 1916 to 1925, to apply the surplus income to reducing the mtges. All testator's debts other than the mtge. debts had been paid off before Mar. 1919, & payment of certain legacies & annuities was begun in Dec. 1919, but no payment was made to the residuary legatees until 1921, after which small annual payments were made. The delivery of a residuary account was not necessary in this case as no legacy duty was payable on the residue. Assessments to super tax for the years 1920–21 to 1925–26 were made upon the applt. to include one-fourth of the income from the property, less annual charges, but without deduction for repayment of mtges.:—Held: so long as the mtge. or other debts remained unpaid the exors. were entitled to retain any assets coming to their hands, the applt. did not enforce conveyance to himself of his share of the residue, & therefore the income arising from his share was not his income for super tax purposes.—*DAW v. 673d. — Question of fact.—A testator by his will devised & bequeathed all his real & personal estate to exors., whom he also appointed trustees upon trust to sell & convert, with power to postpone, & after payment of his funeral & testamentary expenses, debts & legacies, to divide the residue amongst his children in equal shares. At the time of testator's death the estate was subject to mtges. of considerable amount. The exors. had from time to time made advances to the children, & were in the habit of crediting a beneficiary's share of the income of the residuary estate in reduction of the interest on & if sufficient, the capital of the advances to him. One of testator's sons having been assessed to super tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1926, on income which included the sum so credited to him in the preceding year, appealed against the assessment on the ground that the residue had not as yet been ascertained, inasmuch as there was a mtge. on the estate for a large sum, which was still outstanding, & therefore that he had no income from testator's residuary estate to which super tax could attach. The Comrs. held that in those circumstances they were precluded by Daw v. Inland Revenue Comrs., No. 673c, from holding that the residue had been ascertained, & they discharged the assessment:—Held: the question whether the residue had been ascertained & the bequest assented to by the exors. was a question of fact to be determined by the Comrs. & not by the ct.; there was no rule of law that the mere existence of an outstanding mtge. prevented the residue from being ascertained; the Comrs. had misdirected themselves in law in holding that Daw's case, No. 673b, prevented them from coming to a decision on the facts, & the case must be remitted to them for a finding whether on the facts the residue had been ascertained so as to constitute a trust fund; also, Daw's case, No. 673b, decided no principle of law, but was merely a decision on the particular facts of that case.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 673e. ——An assessment to sur-tax in respect of an income of £31,239 was made on resp., L. C., for the year ending Apr. 5, 1935. The assessment included a sum of £17,073, being the gross equivalent of a sum of £13,600 13s. 9d. placed to the credit of Mrs. D. G. C. (resp.'s wife) by the exors. of the will of her late father, R. G. Mrs. D. G. C. was entitled to a life interest in three-fifths of the residuary estate of R. G., who died on Apr. 22, 1934. The residuary estate was made up by the exors. as at May 7, 1935, & evidence was given at the hearing, which the Comrs. accepted, that it could not have been made up at an earlier date. In the balance sheet & income account as at Apr. 5, 1935, kept by the exors. there appeared the sum of £13,600 13s. 9d. placed to the credit of Mrs. D. G. C. This sum, with the appropriate addition of income tax thereon, amounted to the sum of £17,073, which was included in the assessment under appeal. On behalf of the resp. it was contended (a) that the residue of the estate of the testator was not ascertained before May 7, 1935; (b) that prior to the ascertainment of the residue no income within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts arose or accrued to resp.'s wife from the estate of the testator; (c) that no part of the £13,600 13s. 9d. was received by the wife of resp. as income; & accordingly (d) that the assessment made on the resp. for the year 1934-35 was excessive by the amount of £17,073. It was contended on behalf of the Crown (1) that resp.'s wife had received at least the £17,073 above referred to, (2) that the tenant for life, resp.'s wife, could only receive income, (3) that any sum received by resp.'s wife or credited to her formed part of resp.'s income for super-tax purposes. The Comrs. upheld the contention of the Crown, but the figures having been agreed they reduced the assessment to £26,305. On appeal LAWRENCE, J., held that Mrs. C. was not entitled to anything until the residue was ascertained, & that the sum which she then received, representing the share of income which had accrued during the period of administration, was not received as such income but a sum equal to the income, & the amount was therefore wrongly included in the computation of surtax. On appeal by the Crown:—Held: the case was governed by the principle laid down by the House of Lords in Dr. Barnardo's Homes v. Special Comrs. of Income Tax, [1921] 2 A. C. 1; 28 Digest 84, 483, that until the residue was ascertained in due course of administration the beneficiaries had no title to that residue; & (2) the existence of the rule in Alhusen v. Whittell (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 295; 23 Digest 464, 5358, did not alter the fundamental fact that during the period of administration the income was the income of the exors. & of no one else.—CORBETT v. or certain members of his family during his lifetime, must be regarded as being in occupation under the will, & the profits & gains representing the annual value of the house formed part of his income for purposes of super tax.—*TOLLEMACHE v. 674b. Difference between net Schedule A. assessment & reduced rental paid under lease.—Resp. negotiated for a lease of a house at a rent of £135 per annum, but it was eventually agreed that if resp. would pay £683, which was necessary to put the premises in a fit state for habitation, a lease would be granted at a rent of £35 per annum. The sum of £683 was paid before the execution of the lease. The circumstances in which the rent was fixed at £35 per annum were not set out in the lease, which was for a term of seven years, shortly afterwards extended for another year in consideration of resp. contributing £141 towards further repairs, but it was agreed therein that the rent under any new lease should be £140 per annum:—Held: the sums paid by resp. for repairs at the beginning of his tenancy were capital expenditure, & the difference between the net Schedule A. assessment on the house & the rent of £35 actually paid under the lease formed part of his total income for super tax purposes.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 674d. ———.—Testator by his trust disposition & settlement directed his trustees to hold & retain his lands & estates at M. & to pay all duties & burdens & the cost of repair & maintenance & in the event of his death without issue, to allow his wife "to occupy & possess during her lifetime free of rent or taxes both landlord's & tenant's" the mansion-house of M. with the offices & furniture & other effects therein & the game on his estates. Testator having died without issue, his widow, under the terms of the trust, occupied the mansion-house & lands at M. during the year ending Apr. 5, 1920.

On an appeal by her to the Special Comrs. against an additional assessment to super tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1921, on a sum representing (a) the annual value of the mansion-house & lands, & (b) certain payments by the trustees for rates & wages, the Comrs. upheld the additional assessment, but their determination was reversed by the First Division of the Ct. of Session as the Ct. of Exchequer in Scotland:—Held: (1) as occupier in her own right of the mansion-house & lands the widow was rightly assessed on the annual value of her free enjoyment as being income liable to super tax. The liability of the occupier to super tax is not determined by the question whether he has power to let or otherwise to convert the annual value into money; (2) the money paid by the trustees for rates was paid for the benefit of the widow & ought to be included in her total income for super tax purposes.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 674e. Profits of partnership—Executor of deceased partner becoming partner.—Applt. was the sole extrix. & residuary legatee of her late husband, who, until his death in 1916, was a partner in a firm. At the time of his death large sums were owing to the firm from residents in enemy countries, & by arrangement with the Inland Revenue these were allowed as bad debts, on the understanding that any sums received in respect of them should be brought into account for income tax as profits of the firm of the year in which they were received. On her husband's death applt. became a partner in the firm. In 1921 a sum was received in respect of the enemy debts, in respect of which the firm was assessed to income tax in the year ended Apr. 5, 1923. By arrangement between the partners applt. bore a proportion of the assessment in respect of the sum so received proportionate to her late husband's share of the profits:—Held: no part of the sum received in respect of the enemy debts formed any part of applt.'s total income for super tax purposes.—LASSEN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1927), 138 L. T. 463; 13 Tax Cas. 229.

674f. — Distributed by agreement after accumulation.—In 1918 one of the partners in a firm died. Availing himself of certain provisions in the deed of partnership he had by his will nominated his son to be a partner & to succeed to his interests in the firm as from the date of his death. The partnership deed made such a nomination subject to the consent of the other partners, provided that such consent should not be unreasonably withheld. This consent was not given & was eventually, in 1926, formally refused. Throughout this period what would have been the deceased father's share of the profits was carried to a suspense account & remained undistributed. Under the provisions of the partnership deed if the son were admitted as a partner this share of the profits from the date of the father's death to the date of the son's admission would belong wholly to applt. in the first case; but if the son were not admitted these profits would be divisible equally between the first applt. & the three other partners. Two of the latter three retired & relinquished any claim they might have in the matter. It was agreed in 1926 that the accumulated profits should be distributed as to 25 per cent. to the one other then remaining original partner (whose exors. were appls. in the second case) & as to 75 per cent. to the first applt. This distribution was not actually made until 1928. The son in 1926 & again in 1928 attempted unsuccessfully to contest by litigation the validity of these proceedings. The Crown contended that the parties were entitled, on the basis of the 1926 agreement, to shares of 75 per cent. & 25 per cent. respectively in the profits in question year by year from 1918 onwards & were assessable to super tax accordingly. The special comrs. on appeal upheld this view. Appls. demanded cases:—Held: the first applt. was assessable in respect only of the 25 per cent. to which he was entitled in any event & in the second case there was no liability.—FRANKLIN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SWAYTHLING'S EXORS. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1930), 15 Tax Cas. 464.

674g. Undistributed profits of company—Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21—"Reasonable time"—Termination by liquidation.—The share capital of a limited co. registered in 1922 was held by four persons, & the co. was a co. to which above sect. applied. In Feb. 1924, the directors came to the conclusion that the prosperity of the business, which was speculative, might not continue. Accounts for the year to Mar. 31, 1924, were prepared, showing a profit of approximately £34,000, & were presented at the general meeting on May 14, 1924. No dividend was declared & at the same meeting a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the co. was passed, & a liquidator appointed. The Special Comrs. issued a direction to the co. that for super tax purposes the co.'s income for the year ended Mar. 31, 1924, should be deemed to be the income of the four shareholders. This direction was discharged by the Special Comrs. on appeal, but was restored by the Board of Referees on a re-hearing. The contention of the co. was that above sect. had no application in the circumstances of the case, & that on the passing of the resolution for winding-up it had no power to declare a dividend:—Held: the co., by going into liquidation while the "reasonable time" contemplated by the Act was still running, terminated that reasonable time, & that in view of the intended liquidation it would have been reasonable for them to have distributed the whole of the available income.—SUTCLIFFE (LIONEL), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 171.

— What amounts to income—Profits appropriated to endowment policies.—Applt. co. was formed in 1918 as a private limited co. by a husband & wife, who at all times held all its issued capital except five one-shilling shares. The objects for which it was established did not include the carrying on of any business to which the Assurance Co. Act, 1909 (c. 49), applies. The only business that the co. carried on was the issuing of endowment policies & the management of the funds received by way of premiums for such policies. The only policies issued were a small number of policies issued to the husband & wife in 1918 & 1919, payable in 1928 & 1929. After the surrender of certain policies in force only for a few months in 1918 & 1919 the only policies remaining were four policies, the consideration for each of which had been the transfer in one amount to the co. as a lump sum premium, of National War Bonds of a face value equal to the amount assured by the policy. Under these policies the co. undertook to repay the sum assured "together with any bonus which at the time of payment will be attached to the policy." There was no provision in the policies or in the co.'s articles giving the policy-holders a title to any share in the co.'s profits. The co. each year "appropriated" to the account kept for each of the policies an amount approximately corresponding to the interest on the bonds transferred as the premium for such policy & made corresponding investments, which were treated as held against the policy:—Held: the interest in question was income of the co. for the purposes of sect. 21.—ENDOWMENT CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 353.

674j. ————— Sums applied in repayment of share or loan capital or debt.]—A private limited co. was incorporated in Mar. 1915, to purchase from H. certain freehold & leasehold properties known as the C. Estate, subject to mtges. owing thereon amounting to £238,000, which were vested in H., who also held all the shares in the co. with the exception of two which were held by two directors of the co., who together with H. were the directors of the co. The Arts. of Assocn. of the co. contained an article, No. 95, which provided that "so long as any mtge. or charge affecting any property of the co. shall remain outstanding & unsatisfied the net profits of the co. shall be applied in the discharge & satisfaction, so far as the same shall be available, of the principal moneys & the moneys secured by any mtge. or charge for the time being outstanding & unsatisfied, unless the co. shall by special resolution direct to the contrary." There was also a deed poll executed by H. in Nov. 1915, by which it was provided that the net profits of the co. should be applied, without any deduction for interest on mtge. debts to which he was entitled, in the discharge & satisfaction of the principal moneys & interest payable in respect of the mtge. debts mentioned in the sched. to the deed poll, to which H. was not beneficially entitled. These outstanding mtges. were afterwards taken over by H. No dividends had ever been paid by the co., but the mtges. had been reduced from £238,000 to £186,000, & the co. had also accumulated a reserve fund of £80,000. The Special Comrs. made a direction under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21, which was confirmed by the Board of Referees, that for the purposes of assessment to super tax the actual income from all sources of the co. should for the periods ended June 24, 1924, 1925, & 1926, respectively, be deemed to be the income of the members of the co.:—Held: (1) neither art. 95 of the Arts. of Assocn. of the co. nor the fact that no special resolution had been passed by the co. altering the requirements of that article precluded the Special Comrs. from making a direction under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1), that the co. had not distributed a reasonable part of its income to its members, & therefore the income of the co. should for the purposes of assessment to super tax be deemed to be the income of its members; (2) the fact that Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31 (1), expressly provided that sums expended or applied in redemption or repayment of any share or loan capital or debt should be regarded as income available for distribution among the members of the co.; & therefore in terms applied to the present case, did not prevent such sums being regarded as available for distribution among the members of the co. under the general provisions contained in Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1); (3) where there has been no distribution by a co. among its members of a reasonable part of its actual income, & in consequence a direction has been made by the Special Comrs. under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1), that the actual income from all sources of the co. shall for the purposes of assessment to super tax be deemed to be the income of the members, the whole of the income of the co. & not merely that part of its income that might reasonably have been distributed by the co. among its members, is to be treated as being covered by the direction of the Comrs.—*COLVILLE ESTATE, LTD. v. 674k. —————.]—G., Ltd., was a private co. incorporated in 1918. At all times material in the present case the whole capital was held by two persons, who were also the co.'s sole directors. G., Ltd., in pursuance of one of the objects for which it was formed, acquired in 1918 the whole issued share capital of another co. The funds necessary for this transaction were obtained partly by loans from the two directors, & partly by a loan from a bank obtained on the conditions (a) that all the shares so acquired were deposited with the bank as security, & (b) that all dividends on the shares were paid to the bank, as & when received, in reduction of the amount due to the bank. From 1919 to 1923 dividends were received & paid over under this arrangement. During these years G., Ltd., had no other income. Its expenses were met by loans from the directors who also from time to time lent to the co. further sums which were paid to the bank to reduce the balance due from the co. At May 21, 1922, the co.'s financial year ended on May 21, the amount owing to the bank was £4,965. In Nov. 1922, the bank advanced further sums with which the co. made other investments. The amount owing to the bank at May 21, 1923, was £7,933. The Special Comrs. issued "directions" under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21, that the dividends received by G., Ltd., during the year to May 21, 1922, £19,500, & during the year to May 21, 1923, £6,500, should be deemed to be income of the two shareholders for super tax purposes. On appeal the Special Comrs. discharged these "directions." The I. R. Comrs. required the case to be reheard by the Board of Referees, who restored the "directions." The co. appealed to the High Ct.:—Held:

(a) as regards the first year, the co. could not make any distribution & the decision of the Board of Referees could not stand; (b) as regards the second year, the Board of Referees were entitled to come to the decision which they had given, as there was a balance available for distribution, the amount of the dividends received having been in excess of the amount owing to the bank in respect of the 1918 loan.—*GLAZED KID, LTD. v. 674l. Income for period ending on date of winding-up resolution.—A co. was incorporated in Feb. 1908, as a private co., & the principal shareholders on the material dates did not exceed five in number. By an agreement dated Nov. 16, 1928, the co. agreed for the sale of its assets & undertaking to a purchasing co. By clause 8 of the agreement it was provided that possession of the assets & undertaking of the co. should be retained by it up to completion on or before Dec. 15, 1928, & that from Aug. 31, 1928, the date up to which the annual accounts of the co. were made up, the co. should be deemed to be carrying on the business on behalf of the purchasing co., & should account & be entitled to be indemnified accordingly. On Dec. 20, 1928, the co. went into voluntary liquidation:—Held: notwithstanding the provision in clause 8 of the agreement, the income of the co. between Sept. 1 & Nov. 16, 1928, was under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1), & Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31 (4), income of the co. for the period from Sept. 1 to Dec. 20, 1928, available for distribution to the members of the co. which the Special Comrs. had rightly directed should be deemed, for the purpose of assessment to sur tax, income of the members of the co. to be apportioned among them.

Per LORD HANWORTH, M.R., & SLESSER, L.J.: The provision in sect. 21 (1) of 1922 Act, giving the Special Comrs. power so to direct only in respect of "a reasonable part of the actual income," is a limitation of the power which has no application to the income for a period ending on the date of a winding-up resolution or order, having regard to the provision in sect. 31 (4), of the latter Act that income of the period should be "deemed to be income available for distribution to the members of the co." & to the inapplicability to a period so ending of the considerations to be taken into account in fixing the reasonable part under the proviso to sect. 21 (1) of 1922 Act.—*COLLIER (H.) & SONS, LTD. v. "Reasonable part of income"

Sums carried to reserve.—Appl. co.'s business was concerned with the dealing in & the ownership & management of property. The co.'s net profits for the year ended Mar. 25, 1928, were £38,868 & its income, computed as for income tax purposes, was approximately £26,000. Dividends were declared in respect of the year ended Mar. 25, 1928, amounting to £18,750 & £20,000 was transferred to reserve. A direction by the Special Comrs. under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 22 (1), in respect of the year ended Mar. 25, 1928, was discharged on appeal & the appeal was re-heard by the Board of Referees. The co. contended that the allocation to reserve out of the profits of the year in question was reasonable & proper having regard, in general, to the co.'s need for a reserve for the maintenance & development of its business &, in particular, to the co.'s commitments in the way of redemption of mtgs. secured on its property & to a possible additional liability to income tax of some £20,000 dependent upon the final decision in the case of Salisbury House Estate, Ltd. v. Fry, which at the time of the allocation was under appeal to the Cts.). The Board of Referees held that the co. had not within a reasonable time after Mar. 25, 1928, distributed a reasonable part of its actual income for the year ended on that date & restored the Special Comrs.' direction:—Held: there was evidence upon which the Board of Referees could come to their decision, which was not wrong in law.—*LONDON & NORTHERN ESTATES CO., LTD. v. 674p. — Current requirements & development of business to be considered.—The Comrs. found that appl. co. had for the income tax year in question expended on the current requirements of its business, & other requirements advisable for the maintenance & development of that business, amounts far in excess of the profits of the year, & that the co.'s business had been so carried on as to bring it within the purview of Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21, so that for purposes of super tax of the members of the co. the income of the co. for the year in question must be deemed to be the income of the members. The Special Comrs., the Board of Referees & FINLAY, J., & the Ct. of Appeal confirmed their decision:—Held: there was evidence upon which the Comrs. could find that the co., had not distributed a reasonable part of its income, & that therefore it came within the purview of sect. 21. The direction in the proviso to sect. 21 was that one of the relevant factors to which attention must be paid by the Comrs. & by the Board of Referees was the fact that the income, or sums equivalent to the income, had been spent on requirements necessary or advisable for the maintenance & development of the business; but the proviso did not mean that wherever that happened, then, whatever the facts were, the Comrs. were bound to hold that the requirements of sect. 21 had not been complied with.—*MONTAGUE BURTON LTD. v. COMRS. (1936), 105 L. J. K. B. 236; 154 L. T. 355; 20 Tax Cas. 48, H. L.

674q. ——— “Under the control of not more than five persons”—Meaning of “control.”]—A private co. was formed with the object of acquiring an interest in the estate of a tenant for life under certain family settlements. Its nominal capital was £2,000 divided into 1,000 ordinary shares of £1 each & 1,000 preference shares of £1 each, there having been issued & fully paid 50 ordinary shares & 700 preference shares. The 50 ordinary shares had all along been held by the tenant for life. Of the 700 preference shares fourteen persons had acquired 50 each & had continuously held them except one who had transferred his shares to the now holder of them. The holders of the preference shares acquired them with their own moneys & were beneficial holders of them. None of them was under any agreement as to the manner in which he should use the voting powers attached to his shares. The tenant for life personally guaranteed to the preference shareholders the capital value of their shares & the dividends thereon, & in return these shareholders undertook not to dispose of their shares without first giving the tenant for life the opportunity to purchase them. The Arts. of Assocn. provided that the directors might issue the shares to such persons & on such terms as they thought fit; that seven days’ notice was to be given of all the co.’s meetings, & that the general nature of all special business must be notified to the co. in advance; & that all shares carried equal voting rights. There had been only two directors of the co. since its incorporation—namely, the tenant for life & a member of the firm of solicitors who acted for him:—Held: the co. was not under the “control” of not more than five persons within the meaning of Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (6), as amended by Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31, either as being under the control of the tenant for life alone or of him & his co-director jointly.

The terms of the definition clause before the ct. censured as unintelligible & ridiculous.—HIMLEY ESTATES, LTD., & HUMBLE INVESTMENTS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1933] 1 K. B. 472; 102 L. J. K. B. 383; 148 L. T. 319; 17 Tax Cas. 367, C. A.

674r. ——— Who are “members”—Whether trustees or beneficiaries.]—Directions were issued by the Special Comrs. under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21, in respect of applt. co.’s income for the period ending on Feb. 13, 1929, on which date the co. went into liquidation. The directions were not contested. Certain shares in the co. were held by trustees under wills, & beneficiaries under the wills were entitled for their lives to any income arising from the shares, other persons being entitled in remainder. The co. appealed against a notice of apportionment among the members of the co. of the co.’s actual income for the period in question which was issued by the Special Comrs. under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), Sched. I., para. 8, & contended, in regard to the shares held by the trustees, that any sums received by the trustees in the liquidation of the co. were capital & not income & that the trustees,

& not the beneficiaries, should be included in the apportionment as members of the co. The Special Comrs. confirmed the apportionment holding that, under Finance Act, 1927 (c. 17), s. 31 (4), the income of the co. for the period in question must be deemed to be income available for distribution to the members & that the beneficiaries were members of the co. within Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21:—Held: the Special Comrs.’ decision was correct.—DREW (ALEXANDER) & SONS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 140.

674s. ———.]—Applt. co. was incorporated in 1924 with a nominal capital of £1,000 divided into 1,000 ordinary shares of £1 each, all but three or four of which were, in the material years, in the hands of one person. In 1925, the co. purchased the life estate in possession of certain estates from the principal shareholder of the co. in consideration of a cash payment & a specified weekly sum during his life, & entered into possession of the estates. The vendor became the managing director of the co. but received no remuneration for his services as such. The co. made profits for the years to Apr. 4, 1926, Apr. 4, 1927, & Apr. 4, 1928, amounting to £6,850, £2,411, & £8,828, respectively, but no dividend was declared by the co. in respect of any of those years. Directions were made under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21, that, for the purposes of assessment to super tax, the co.’s income for the three years ended Apr. 4, 1928, should be deemed to be income of the members. On appeal, the Special Comrs. confirmed the direction made in respect of the year to Apr. 4 1926, but discharged the directions made for the two later years. Both sides thereupon required a re-hearing of the appeal by the Board of Referees. On the re-hearing, the Board of Referees confirmed the direction in regard to the year to Apr. 4, 1926, & reversed the decision of the Special Comrs. in regard to the two later years:—Held: there was evidence on which the Board of Referees could arrive at their determination & that they had not made any error in law.—ALDWARKE CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 125.

674t. ———.]—Applt. co., an unlimited co. formed on Aug. 8, 1925, acquired by agreement dated Aug. 10, 1925 (inter alia) (a) a life interest in a landed estate, & (b) the fee simple of another estate in consideration of the allotment of shares in the co. to the vendor, Lord Carnarvon, who, throughout the material period, held all but one of the shares issued by the co. On Aug. 11, 1925, Lord Carnarvon was granted a lease for a yearly rent of part of one of the estates, the co. covenanting to pay rates & taxes. The lease did not comprise the shooting rights over the estate; during the year to July 31, 1931, they were let & yielded a profit; in the following year they were not let & Lord Carnarvon was allowed to shoot over the estate, no rent being charged to him by the co. During the two years ended July 31, 1932, the co. advanced sums of money to Lord Carnarvon, without security other than deposit notes signed by him. No interest was paid on the small amount repaid during that period nor was interest credited in the co.'s accounts for these years. These accounts, which made no provision for either the depreciation of the co.'s securities or the wasting of the life interest acquired by it, showed profits in each year of over £4,000 & credit balances of £3,091 & £7,327 at July 31, 1931, & July 31, 1932, respectively. No dividend was paid by the co. for these years. Directions were made under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 21 (1), that, for the purposes of assessment to sur tax, the co.'s income for the years ended July 31, 1931, & July 31, 1932, was to be deemed to be the income of its members for these years. On appeal the Special Comrs. confirmed the directions:—Held: there was evidence on which the Special Comrs. could arrive at their determination & they had not made any error of law.—CARNARVON ESTATES CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 643, C. A.

674u. — — — — —.]—By agreement dated Dec. 11, 1934, applt. co., a private co. under the control of not more than five persons, agreed to sell its assets & undertaking to a newly incorporated co. as from Dec. 2, 1933, the date to which its last accounts prior to the agreement had been made up; as from that date applt. co. was to be deemed to have been carrying on business on behalf of the new co. & to account & be indemnified accordingly. On Dec. 22, 1934, a balance sheet & profit & loss account of applt. co. were made up, showing a profit on the sale of its business of £58,962, & the new co. also made up an account to that date showing profits earned in respect of the period prior to its incorporation (arrived at by apportioning the profits of the business from Dec. 3, 1933, to Dec. 22, 1934) amounting to £15,225. It was agreed that income tax should be charged in respect of applt. co.'s trading profits on the basis of this account. On appeal against a direction of the Special Comrs. under sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1922, in respect of the period ended Dec. 22, 1934, the co. contended that it could not after Dec. 22, 1934, have distributed to its members any part of its income for that period; it had no income within Income Tax Acts for that period; & the direction could not legally be made. The direction was discharged by the Special Comrs. on appeal, but on a re-hearing by the Board of Referees it was restored:—Held: the decisions in law of the Board of Referees were correct & they had evidence before them on which they could reach their conclusions.—JOHN WHITE'S TRUST, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1937), 21 Tax Cas. 391.

674v. — — — — — Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34)—Investment company in liquidation before Act in operation.—Applt. co. in the first case (an investment co. if within sect. 20 of Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), & under the control of not more than five persons if within sects. 19 & 20 of that Act) went into liquidation on Aug. 2, 1935. Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), received the Royal assent on July 16, 1936. On appeal against a direction of the Special Comrs. under sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), as extended by sect. 31 of Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), & sects. 19 & 20 of Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), in respect of the period from July 1, 1934, to Aug. 2, 1935, the co. contended that these sects. could not be applied in respect of the period in question having regard to the fact that it went into liquidation before Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), became law. The Special Comrs. confirmed the direction.

The facts in the second case were similar to those in the first case with the exception that applt. co. went into liquidation on Feb. 3, 1936, & that the Special Comrs. confirmed, on appeal, directions in respect of the year ended Dec. 31, 1935, & the period from Jan. 1, 1936, to Feb. 3, 1936:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decision in each case was correct.—*KASTAMONIA COPPER SYNDICATE, LTD. v. 674w. — — — — — Apportionment to loan creditors—Amount apportionable.—An investment co. had issued debentures, & the holder of the debentures was therefore a loan creditor within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 20. For the year ending Nov. 30, 1935, the gross income of the co. was £8,020 6s. 5d. The gross expenditure was £983 10s. 10d. The Crown contended that the difference in these amounts, £7,036 15s. 7d., was the co.'s actual income, & should be apportioned, as to £225, to the shareholders, & as to £6,811 15s. 7d., to the loan creditor. The net income of the co. was £6,215 15s., the payments made to it being subject to deduction of tax. The expenditure of the co. was also subject to deduction of tax, & its net expenditure was £973 13s. 1d. The net cash available in the co.'s hands for the redemption of the debenture was £5,242 1s. 11d. The co. in fact paid the loan creditor £5,200 in part redemption of the debenture which was the instalment of capital agreed to be repaid in that year:—Held: (1) the Special Comrs. can only apportion to loan creditors the actual amount of the income expended in discharge of their loan capital, & not that amount grossed up by the addition of tax thereon; (2) the Special Comrs. could apportion to loan creditors only the sum actually paid in redemption of debt, & not a sum larger than that. Although the co. had income sufficient to redeem a larger amount of the debt, that larger sum was not a sum "available to be expended or applied in redemption" within Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 20 (4) (b).—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. The co. went into voluntary liquidation on Apr. 30, 1935, without having distributed its profits for 1934–1935. The liquidator then sold the business of the co., as at Mar. 31, 1934, to a new co., & the accounts for the year to Mar. 31, 1935, were not prepared until after the sale had been completed. The Special Comrs. directed that the profits shown for the year 1934–1935 should be deemed to be the income of the members of the co. for the purposes of surtax. The co. appealed:—Held: (1) in the event of a liquidation, the words in Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 31, relate to any period for which accounts have not in fact been made up, & the Special Comrs. were entitled to consider the period 1934–1935; (2) although it might have been reasonable to retain the profits in the business, had there been no liquidation, the fact of liquidation in this case made it no longer reasonable or possible to retain profits for the requirements of the business.—*AUSTINS OF EAST HAM, LTD. v. 674cc. Dividends paid out of profits assessed at nil.]

—Applt., a shareholder in a co., received in 1923 two dividends less income tax deducted by the co., such dividends being the distribution of profits received by the co. from foreign possessions in the first year of its existence. Applt. was assessed to & paid super-tax upon these dividends & upon the income tax deducted from them. It was later decided by the House of Lords that, upon the proper construction of the rules, these profits were not assessable to income tax in the first year of the co.'s existence, though they would be assessable in later years. Under this decision the sum paid by the co. to the Inland Revenue in respect of the first year was returned to the co., & ultimately the co. paid to its shareholders a sum equal to the tax deducted in 1923. Applt. was assessed to surtax on the amount so paid to him:—Held: (1) these payments were properly chargeable to surtax & that did not amount to double taxation, because the distribution in 1923 was of profits assessed by reason of the rules at nil, & not of profits not assessable at all; (2) in any event Finance Act, 1931 (c. 28), s. 7, was applicable to the distribution.—BENN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1937] 3 All E. R. 852; 81 Sol. Jo. 845.

674dd. Dividends exceeding income of company for income tax purposes.—Applt. was the holder of shares in a limited co. which, during the year 1928–29, paid dividends exceeding in amount the income of the co., as computed for income tax purposes, for the periods in respect of which the dividends were declared. The dividends were paid under deduction of income tax at the standard rate. On an appeal against an assessment to surtax, which included the full amount of the dividends, he contended that his income from to co., for surtax purposes, could not exceed the proportion received by him of the co.'s statutory income" for the relative periods, i.e. the total amounts on which the co. had borne or been liable to income tax by deduction or direct assessment, less the amount of interest or other annual payments on which it had recovered tax by deduction:—Held: the full amount of the dividends was properly included in the assessment of surtax.—*HAMILTON (F. 674ee. Income received as administrator—Administrator also sole beneficiary.—Applt.'s father & brother died intestate leaving him sole next-of-kin, & he took out letters of administration to both estates. As such administrator he received both those estates chiefly in the form of cash & he invested the money—which was paid into a bank in his own name—in industrial securities. He was assessed to super tax in respect of the income from those securities. During the periods covered by the assessments there were admittedly unsettled claims outstanding for estate duty. There was not sufficient evidence that the income from the securities had been appropriated by applt. to his own use, & in those circumstances it was held that the income of the securities in the hands

674ff. Annual sums payable to servants by deed.]—

By a deed made in Aug. 1930, resp. covenanted to pay A., a gardener in his employment, a yearly sum of £98 16s. by weekly payments of £1 18s. for a period of seven years or during the joint lives of the parties, & it was agreed that the payments were without prejudice to the remuneration to which A. should be entitled for services, if any, thereafter rendered.

Before the deed was executed resp.'s solrs. on his instructions wrote to A. a letter the material parts of which were as follows: "On the 6th inst. we read over with you a deed of covenant which the Duke of Westminster has signed in your favour. . . . We explained that there is nothing in the deed to prevent your being entitled to & claiming full remuneration for such further work as you may do, though it is expected that in practice you will be content with the provision which is being legally made for you for so long as the deed takes effect with the addition of such sum, if any, as may be necessary to bring the total periodical payment while you are still in the Duke's service up to the amount of the salary or wages which you have lately been receiving. You said that you accepted this arrangement, & you accordingly executed the deed. . . . If you are still quite satisfied, we propose to insert the 6th inst. as the date of the deed, & we shall be obliged by your signing the acknowledgment at the foot of this letter & returning it to us." A. signed the acknowledgment accepting the provision made for him & agreeing to the deed being dated & treated as delivered & binding on the parties thereto. The acknowledgment was stamped with a sixpenny stamp :—Held : sums paid yearly under the above-mentioned documents were annual payments within Sched. D., Case III., r. 1, & r. 19, s. 1, of the Rules applicable to Scheds. A., B., C., D. & E. of 1918 Act, & were not payments of salary or wages; & consequently resp., being entitled to deduct tax from the payments, was entitled to deduct the payments themselves in arriving at his total income for the purposes of sur tax.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 674gg. Dividends received by shareholder—Paid to other persons—Reorganisation of company.]

—Applt., who owned or controlled the whole of the issued share capital, consisting wholly of ordinary shares, of a co., entered into an agreement on Dec. 10, 1928, for the sale to purchasers of one-half of these shares. The agreement for sale provided (inter alia) (a) that a cash consideration should be paid to applt.; (b) that arrangements should be made for the increase of the co.'s nominal capital by the creation of 8 per cent. cumulative preference shares & additional ordinary shares, & for the issue of those new shares, & of the balance of the originally authorised ordinary share capital, to applt. & the purchasers in equal parts; (c) that applt. should nominate the purchasers as allottees of the preference shares to which he so became entitled; (d) that the purchasers should be entitled to receive any dividend declared by the co. after Sept. 30, 1927, in respect of their shareholding. The cash consideration was paid by Dec. 21, 1928. On the date of the agreement applt. gave the purchasers a blank transfer for one-half of the then issued ordinary shares. This transfer was not registered by the co., but later in Dec. 1928, applt. gave the co. a mandate to pay to the purchasers all future dividends on a moiety of the ordinary shares. The 8 per cent. cumulative preference shares & the additional ordinary shares were not issued & allotted until Dec. 11, 1929, prior to which date interim & final dividends for the year to Sept. 30, 1929, had been declared by the co. on the existing ordinary shares. Applt., however, directed the co. to pay to the purchasers, out of these dividends, amounts equal to those to which they would have been entitled if the 8 per cent. cumulative preference shares had been created & allotted on the date of payment by the purchasers of the cash consideration under the agreement. Applt. was assessed to sur tax for 1929–30 in a sum which included one-half of the total dividends declared for the year to Sept. 30, 1929. On appeal, he contended that his liability should be restricted to a sum equal to one-half of the difference between (a) the total ordinary dividends, & (b) a sum equivalent to a dividend of 8 per cent. for the period from Dec. 21, 1928, to Sept. 30, 1929, on the amount of the preference capital provided for in the agreement for sale. The Special Comrs. decided that the payments made to the purchasers by applt. out of the dividends payable on the unsold half of his ordinary shares in the co. were applications of part of his income, & the sums so paid remained part of his total income for sur tax purposes :—Held : the Special Comrs.' decision was correct.—COLE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 387, C. A.

674hh. Insurance premiums paid by company on behalf of annuitant—Out of annuity.]—

By an agreement dated Apr. 5, 1928, resp. agreed to sell his life interest in certain settled lands to a co., the consideration to be satisfied partly by the allotment of shares & partly by a cash payment of £35,100 : the agreement further provided that the co. might at its option satisfy the cash payment & any interest thereon by paying a life annuity of £5,200 to resp. without deduction except for income tax. Resp. duly conveyed his life interest by conveyance dated May 8, 1928, which acknowledged allotment of the shares & receipt of the £35,100. By a deed dated May 24, 1928, the co. covenanted, in consideration of the payment to it by resp. of the sum of £35,100, to pay to him for the remainder of his life the sum of £433 6s. 8d. monthly without deduction except for income tax. By a further deed dated Mar. 25, 1931, in consideration of the co.'s covenant to pay resp.'s premiums on certain assurance policies on his life for a period of 11 years from Apr. 5, 1931, resp. agreed as from that date not to demand or attempt to enforce payment of a specified part of the monthly sum of £433 6s. 8d. On appeal against additional assessments to sur tax for the years 1931-32 & 1932-33 made in respect of the amount of the premiums paid by the co., with an appropriate addition for income tax, resp. contended that this amount did not form part of his income for sur tax purposes:—Held: the amount of the premiums paid by the co. for resp. together with an appropriate addition for income tax, formed part of resp.'s total income for sur tax purposes.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. FORSTER (1935), 79 Sol. Jo. 657; 19 Tax Cas. 738.

674jj. Tax free dividend—Paid out of profits assessed to tax.—In paying a dividend to a shareholder the co. stated that it had not exercised its right to deduct income tax & that the dividend was paid in full. The dividend was paid out of accumulated profits & income tax had been paid on profits for the year in the hands of the co.:—Held: the dividend so paid was the net & not the gross income, & in making his return for sur tax the shareholder must add to it the amount of income tax thereon at the standard rate for the year.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. PEARSON, INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. PRATT, [1936] 2 K. B. 533; [1936] 2 All E. R. 731; 105 L. J. K. B. 639; 155 L. T. 351; 52 T. L. R. 538; 80 Sol. Jo. 636; 20 Tax Cas. 433.

674kk. — No profits of company assessable.—A dividend declared on ordinary shares "without deduction of income tax" must, having regard to the Finance Act, 1931, be regarded as a dividend consisting of a net sum after deduction of income tax, & therefore, for the purpose of sur-tax, tax is payable by a shareholder in respect of his dividend on an amount arrived at by ascertaining the sum which after deduction of income tax is equal to the dividend received by him. It makes no difference that owing to losses in the preceding year no income tax is payable by the co. during the year in question, seeing that the profits & gains out of which the dividend is paid will be subjected to income tax in the following year, & that the gross amount so arrived at is not in excess of the profits or gains available for payment of the ordinary dividend.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. CULL, [1938] 2 K. B. 109; [1938] 1 All E. R. 467; 107 L. J. K. B. 512; 158 L. T. 201; 54 T. L. R. 412; 82 Sol. Jo. 134, C. A.

674ll. Arrears of debenture interest—Year of assessment.—Applts. were the exors. of a holder of debentures issued by a private co. on which no interest had been paid up to 1920. In that year a scheme was adopted for the reorganisation of the debenture debt of the co. by which for a certain consideration the debenture holders agreed to the cancellation of the debentures, to leave the accumulated arrears of interest thereon unsecured & to postpone their claims to such interest until the claims of unsecured creditors were satisfied. Eventually in 1928 & 1929 funds became available for the payment of some of the arrears of interest & in these years payment was made to the debenture holders of sums representing interest for the periods from Aug. 1904, to Sept. 1907, & from Sept. 1907, to Mar. 1910, respectively, income tax being deducted on each occasion at the rate in force at the time of payment. On appeal against an assessment to sur tax for the year 1929-30, which included the sum received in 1929 in respect of the interest for the period from Sept. 1907, to Mar. 1910, applts. contended (a) that the sum in question did not form part of the debenture holder's income for sur tax purposes for that year, (b) that, if it did form part of his income for sur tax purposes, it was receivable in the years 1907-8 to 1909-10 inclusive & not in the year in which it was actually received, & (c) that so much of the arrears of interest paid in 1929 as had accrued prior to Apr. 6, 1909, from which date super tax was first imposed, must be excluded from the computation for the purposes of assessment to super tax or sur tax. The Special Comrs. rejected these contentions & confirmed the assessments:—Held: the sum in question was paid under the arrangement made in 1920 & not under the obligations under the original debentures, that it did not become due & payable until 1929 & that accordingly, by virtue of Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 39, it must be deemed to be income of the year 1929-30 for sur tax purposes.—CHAMPNEY'S EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 375, C. A.

674mm. Sale of interest coupons.—Miss P. was the owner of bearer bonds of the City of Budapest. Interest payments in sterling were stopped by a decree of the Hungarian Govt. & the Municipality of Budapest was required to pay into the Hungarian National Bank an equivalent sum in pengos to the credit of a foreign creditors' fund, out of which holders might obtain payment of their interest coupons in pengos, subject to the proceeds being applied to certain purposes within Hungary. Miss P. was also the holder of certain bearer bonds of the Kingdom of Yugoslavia. In respect of these bonds the Govt. of Yugoslavia suspended payment in New York, offering holders the option of payment in dinars in Belgrade, subject to restrictions on the use to which the dinars could be put, or payment of 10 per cent. in dollars, & the issue of funding bonds for the remainder. Miss P. did not avail herself of any of these options, but sold to agents, at a discount, the coupons of both sets of bonds as they fell due. The question to be determined was whether the gross sums received by Miss P. during the year ending Apr. 5, 1933, from the sale of the coupons of the City of Budapest bonds & the gross sums received by her during the year ending Apr. 5, 1934, from the sale of coupons of the bonds of Yugoslavia respectively formed part of her total income from all sources for those two years, so as to render her liable to be assessed for sur-tax in respect of them. The Special Comrs. decided this question in favour of the Crown in relation to the Budapest bonds & in favour of Miss P. in relation to the Yugoslavia bonds. An appeal by the Crown & a cross-appeal by Miss P. were taken to FINLAY, J., who decided both in favour of Miss P. On an appeal to the Ct. of Appeal by the Crown in both cases:—Held: as to both sets of bonds that the proceeds of sale were not income arising to Miss P. either under Case IV. of Sched. D or under Sched. C, & did not fall to be included in her total income for the purposes of assessment to sur-tax.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. PAGET, PAGET v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1938] 2 K. B. 25; [1938] 1 All E. R. 392; 107 L. J. K. B. 657; 158 L. T. 187; 54 T. L. R. 404; 82 Sol. Jo. 172, C. A.

674nn. Interest in residue—Whether vested or contingent.—The trustees of a will were directed to hold, apply & convey the residue of testator's estate to & for the behoof of his son. It was declared (a) that, until the son should reach the age of twenty-five, the trustees should apply the whole or part of the income, at their discretion, for his maintenance, education & upbringing; (b) that, upon his attaining twenty-five years, the son should be paid one-half of the capital absolutely, & should receive the income of the remaining half until he was thirty, when that half was to be paid to him absolutely. It was further declared "that it shall be a condition of this bequest of capital of the residue to my said son that he shall be able to speak & write French & German fluently & shall pass the Civil Service examination & obtain a first-class certificate therein, & further that before he shall obtain the control of the capital of said residue or any part thereof he shall spend at least one year in making a voyage round the world outside the limits of the Continent of Europe." The trustees were also given power to settle the capital on the son for life with remainder to his issue. On appeal against assessments to sur tax made on the son on the footing that he had a vested interest in the residue of his father's estate, resps. (as the son's tutors) contended that the son, who had not attained twenty-five, had no vested interest in the residue because the bequest of capital was subject to suspensive conditions, & that in these circumstances his interest was contingent only. The Special Comrs. held that the residue was not vested in the son & they accordingly discharged the assessments:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decision was correct.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. KIDSTON (1936), 20 Tax Cas. 603.

674oo. Loan repaid by other company—Distribution.—Applt. was an ordinary shareholder in a co. which in 1922 & 1923 advanced sums at interest to another co. The interest on the loan was duly paid under deduction of income tax, but after Apr. 1924, the lending co. regarded the loan as a doubtful debt & applied all interest receipts to writing down its value. In 1933, however, the loan was repaid in full & the co. credited the surplus over the written-down value of the loan in its books to profit & loss account. In July, 1934, the co. distributed part of this amount as "capital (surplus or) profit" to its ordinary shareholders. On appeal against an assessment to sur-tax for the year 1934-35 which included the amount so received by him, with an appropriate addition for income tax, applt. contended that the distribution was a distribution of a capital surplus & did not form part of his income for sur-tax purposes; alternatively, that the sum received was not a net amount to which an addition on account of income tax should be made in computing liability to sur-tax. The Special Comrs. decided that the sum received by applt. represented a dividend paid out of a fund of taxed income & that the corresponding gross amount formed part of his income for sur-tax purposes for the year 1934-35:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decision was correct.—DIXON v. st. Lump sum paid to retiring partner.—One of the partners of a firm having retired, the partnership business was continued by the remaining partners, & the retiring partner received £1,500 "in full satisfaction of his whole share & interest in the profits of the year current at the date of dissolution of the original partnership,"

& it was further provided that there should be paid to him quarterly "out of the future profits of the business" sums amounting to £500 for the first year, & diminishing gradually to £100 for the fifth year:—Held: (1) the £1,500 was not a share of the profits of the firm, but the price or consideration paid for a discharge by the retiring partner of his claim to participate in the profits of the firm prior to his retirement, & the agreement did not affect the ascertainment of their share of the profits up to that date; (2) the quarterly payments "out of the future profits" did fall to be taken into account in estimating their profits after that date.—RUTHERFORD v. 681a. ———.]—Lord M., who died on Jan. 7, 1917, by his will bequeathed an annuity of £25,000 free of income tax to his wife. The Ct. of Chancery decided that the annuity was bequeathed free of both income & super tax. The trustees of the will appealed against assessments to income tax for the five years ended Apr. 5, 1926, made upon them in respect of so much of the annuity as was not paid out of profits & gains brought into charge to tax. The will provided for the payment of the annuity primarily out of the income of the residuary estate, but, if insufficient, resort might be had to the capital of the residuary estate from time to time to make good the deficiency. The trustees alleged that for the purpose of arriving at the assessment under r. 21 of the rules applicable to all scheds. & Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 26, the amount of the annuity ought to be taken to be £25,000 with the appropriate addition to make the grossed amount which would produce £25,000 net after deduction of income tax only, which for example in 1925–26 would have been £31,250; & no addition should be made in respect of any super tax. The Crown claimed that there ought to be added that portion of the super tax assessed on the recipient of the annuity which bore the same proportion to the total super tax assessed on the recipient as the sum of £25,000, together with additions calculated on a similar basis for the previous year bore to the total income from all sources of the recipient during that year, & that a further addition should then be made to the sum so arrived at sufficient to make the total sum, after deduction of income tax at the rate current during the year, produce the sum so arrived at. The comrs. held that the payment of the super tax by the trustees was an additional annuity to Lady M., & that in computing the amount of the annuity for the purpose of assessment under r. 21 & sect. 26 the super tax with the income tax appropriate thereto must be included:—Held: there had been given to Lady M. an additional annuity of such a sum as, after the deduction of the income tax thereon, would leave the amount of super tax for which she was chargeable in respect of the annuity given by the will, & income tax was payable on that additional annuity. — *MICHELHAM'S TRUSTEES v. f. Annuity & income tax thereon.—By an antenuptial marriage settlement a husband conveyed funds to trustees for payment of an annuity of £600 free of income tax to his wife, & for payment of the balance of the free income to himself. By a subsequent agreement, following upon divorce, the wife discharged her claims under the settlement, & the husband granted a mandate to the settlement trustees to pay an annuity of £600 free of tax to the wife, & the balance of the free income to himself. The intention of the agreement was declared to be that the wife should receive an absolutely free annuity of £600, & the husband bound himself to relieve her of income tax thereon in the event of her being found liable to pay it:—Held: in computing the husband's income for super tax he was entitled to deduct, in respect of the annuity, such a sum as would, after deduction of income tax, amount to £600; & that rule 23 (2) did not invalidate the payment of £600 in full to the wife, in respect (a) that the annuity was payable under the agreement out of net income belonging to the husband, which had already borne tax, & (b) that the husband had undertaken that the wife could receive such

gy. Allowance by father to son.—Finance Act, 1922, s. 20 (1).—A father, who had paid a sum of money to his son, a married man, of full age, under a gratuitous bond by which he had bound himself to pay to the son an annuity for a period of three years, claimed to deduct the sum in question in calculating the amount of his total income for super tax purposes, on the ground that above sect. (c) applied to the case:—Held: the deduction was inadmissible, in respect that the income disposed fell exactly within the description contained in above sect. (b), being for a period of less than six years, & it must accordingly be deemed to be the father's income for super tax purposes.—GILLIES v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1929] S. C. 131; 14 Tax Cas. 329.—SCOT.

zz. Loss on purchase of shares in other companies.—In 1920 applt. co. was incorporated in India & entered into agreements with two English cos. what had promoted it & were at all times practically the only shareholders, to purchase from them a large block of shares in B. C. Ltd., the consideration being the allotment to them of an equal number of fully paid shares of

Rs. 200 each in applt. co. Half the shares were to be, & were, allotted immediately; the English cos. could retain the B. C. Ltd., shares for 3 years, & pledge them to secure their own liabilities. In 1923, no further shares having been allotted & no B. C. Ltd., shares delivered, a supplemental agreement was made under which the English cos. in 1924 sold all the B. C. Ltd., shares, the price realised & dividends being credited to applt. co.; it was part of this agreement that the shares already allotted should satisfy the original purchase consideration. In respect of super tax for 1924–25 under Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, applt. co. alleged that the transaction had resulted in a loss to them which they were entitled to deduct from profits otherwise accruing. They contended that in ascertaining the result of the transaction the allotted shares must be taken at their normal value of Rs. 200 each. It was found by the commissioner that in 1920 each share in applt. co. was worth Rs. 98:—Held: no loss was proved as the English cos. were liable to applt. co. for the amount by which the sum realised was less than the nominal value of the allotted shares.—TRUSTEES CORPN. (INDIA), LTD. v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX (1930), 57 L. R. Ind. App. 162, P. IND.

684a. — Payable out of estate created by mortgage.]—Applt. was entitled to the income for life of settled property after certain sums had been provided for other persons by accumulations out of the income. Before the sums in question had been wholly accumulated, applt., acting under powers conferred by a private Act, mtged. the income arising from the settled property during his life to raise the necessary balances. The mtges. were protected by policies upon the life of applt. The Act provided that every mtge. effected under its powers should pass an estate or interest for applt.'s life in priority to all existing interests. The mtges. were subsequently consolidated & later the consolidating mtge. was, under powers provided by another private Act, taken over by the trustees of the settled property. This second Act (inter alia) provided that the premiums on the life assurance policies should be a first charge on the income of the settled property & specifically directed the trustees to retain the necessary amounts out of the income & to pay the premiums as & when due. The comrs. of Inland Revenue contended that the amounts applied in payment of the premiums formed part of applt.'s income for super tax purposes:—Held: the income out of which the premiums were paid was not income of applt., & the amounts applied in payment of premiums did not form part of his income for super tax purposes.—WOLVERTON (LORD) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1931), 16 Tax Cas. 467, H. L.

687a. —.]—The exor. of a deceased taxpayer appealed against super tax assessments which had been made on deceased in respect of his wife's income from settled funds & from certain shares. Deceased had obtained an advance of £11,000 from the trustees of his marriage settlement on the security of shares not forming part of the settled funds. Subsequently he had charged his life interest in the settled funds, thereby forfeiting it in favour of his wife. Later he was adjudicated bankrupt, & the mortgaged shares which had become practically valueless were sold by the Official Receiver for a nominal consideration to the wife, who thus became entitled to the equity of redemption. In 1920 the shares again became very valuable, & the trustees, to whom the £11,000 was still owing, issued an originating summons to the parties interested, & as a result the ct. sanctioned a compromise by which the trustees were to retain each year any amount by which the wife's aggregate income from the settled funds & the mortgaged shares, after deducting income tax & super tax on that aggregate income, should exceed £4,000. The whole balance of the debt to the trustee was thus paid off within fifteen months & deceased's exor. contended that the surplus income so applied should be deducted from the wife's total income in computing the deceased's liability to super tax:—Held: the surplus income of the wife appropriated by the trustees formed part of deceased's income for purposes of super tax.—PERKINS' EXECUTOR v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 13 Tax Cas. 851.

687b. Purchase-price of share of deceased partner.]—By a deed of partnership it was provided (inter alia) that the partnership should not be determined as regards the other partners by reason of the death of one partner, & that "the purchase-money for the share of a deceased partner . . . shall be a sum equal to one-half of the share of profits for three years commencing from the first day of the month immediately following the death of such partner which would have been payable to such deceased partner had he continued to be a partner during the said period of three years." Upon the death of a partner in June 1933, sums were paid to his personal representatives on account of the purchase-price of his share for the periods July 1, 1933, to Dec. 31, 1933, & for the year ending Dec. 31, 1934. A surviving partner contended that these sums were annual payments & that, in computing his total income for surtax purposes for the years ending Apr. 5, 1934 & 1935, he was entitled to deduct his share of the sums so paid:—Held: payment for deceased partner's share was to be a lump sum to be paid at the end of the three years period. Such payment was a payment of a capital sum, & the surviving partner was not entitled to make the deduction claimed.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LEDGARD, [1937] 2 All E. R. 492; 81 Sol. 688a. — Single premium policy—Loan by company—Capitalisation of unpaid interest.]—Applt. took out an insurance policy on his life in consideration of a single premium, a part of which was advanced to him by the insurance co. as a loan. The loan agreement provided that, if the interest on the loan, which was payable annually on a fixed date, was not paid on that date, it was to be deemed to be a new loan & capitalised & added to the original advance, the total amount of the loans & accrued interest being deductible from the moneys payable on the maturity of the policy. Applt. did not, as was open to him, pay in cash the loan interest as & when it fell due each year &, in accordance with the terms of the loan agreement, the net amount due, i.e., after deduction of income tax, was added to the loan:—Held: having regard to the terms of the loan agreement, applt. must be deemed to have paid the interest payable each year by means of advances made for that purpose by the co. & such interest was accordingly admissible as a deduction in computing his income for sur tax purposes.—CARNARVON (EARL) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 455.

Annotations:—Folld. Marland v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 467. Consd. I. R. Comrs. v. Lawrence, Graham & Co., [1937] 2 K. B. 179.

688b. ———.—]—Applt. took out two insurance policies on his life, the consideration in each case being a single premium. On the date of issue of each policy the insurance co. advanced to applt. a sum by way of a loan on the security of the policy. Under the terms of the loan agreements interest was payable on the loans each year & compound interest was to be charged on all interest remaining unpaid for more than one month after the due date, but the agreements provided that applt. was not to be personally liable for payment of any interest, which, together with the principal of the loans, could be retained by the co. out of the moneys payable on the maturity of the policies. Applt., although having ample funds for the purpose, did not pay in cash the loan interest at the due dates, & the interest, less income tax, was in each case added to the original loan in accordance with the terms of the loan agreements:—Held: having regard to the terms of the loan agreements between him & the co., applt. must be deemed to have paid the interest payable each year by means of advances made for the purpose by the co. & such interest was accordingly admissible as a deduction in computing his income for sur tax purposes.—MARLAND v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 467.

688c. ———.—]—Interest paid.—On Mar. 19, 1929, a life assurance policy was taken out in consideration of a single premium, a substantial part of which was met by a loan made to the assured by the co. on the security of the policy. Interest was payable on the loan each year on Mar. 19, & was in fact paid each year up to Mar. 19, 1932, inclusive. The assured died in July, 1932, & later the co. paid to his exors. the amount due on the policy & in accordance with the terms of the loan agreement, received, by way of set-off against such amount the principal of the loan & the interest due for the period from Mar. 19, 1932, to date of death. On appeal against an assessment made on them to sur tax for the year 1932–33, the exors. claimed a deduction in respect of the interest accrued from Mar. 19, 1932, to the date of death, contending that such interest was a payment whereby deceased's income for the year of assessment was or might be diminished within sect. 27 (1) (b) of 1918 Act:—Held: the income of deceased was not diminished by the interest in question inasmuch as it did not become due until the date of his death.—RIGDEN'S EXECUTORS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 474.

689a. Lunacy percentage.—(1) Payments out of the income of a lunatic of his committee's remuneration & of the lunacy percentage on his clear annual income payable to the ct. under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 148, & the Lunacy Rules, 1892, r. 133, cannot be deducted from a lunatic's gross income for the purpose of an assessment to super tax.

(2) A decision of the Comrs. for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts in assessing super tax for a previous year that the above deductions can be made does not operate as a res judicata to prevent a contrary decision in assessing super tax for a later year.

Per LORD HANWORTH, M.R. & GREER, L.J.: The determination by Special Comrs. of the amount of an assessment to super tax is not a decision of a lis inter partes so as to create an estoppel by way of res judicata. The assessment is final & conclusive between the parties only in regard to the assessment for the particular year for which it is made.

Per ROMER, L.J.: The decision of the Special Comrs. upon any incidental question of fact or law, however necessary it may be for the purpose of ascertaining the income for the year of assessment, cannot be conclusive in reference to the ascertainment of the taxpayer's income for any subsequent year of assessment.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 689c. Annual sum payable by deed.—Resp. covenanted by deed to pay a certain sum quarterly to a person (not being a child of his) for her life. The deed reserved to him a power of revocation subject to the written consent of a person named therein or of some person appointed by resp. other than his wife. Resp. claimed, in the computation of his sur-tax liability, a deduction for the payments made by him under the deed. The Special Comrs., on appeal, decided that the payments could not be deemed to be income in the hands of resp. under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20 (1) (a):—Held: resp. was entitled to the deductions claimed.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. FIRTH (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 603.

689d. Payments under deed to trustees for benefit of charity.—By a deed executed in Aug. 1930, F. covenanted to pay to trustees from his general taxed income for the period of eight years from Apr. 6, 1930, or during his life, whichever should be the shorter, a specified monthly sum commencing on Apr. 6, 1930. These monthly sums were to be held by the trustees in trust for distribution among certain charities or persons, other than the disponor, as he should direct, any surplus remaining in the hands of trustees at the end of the year to be held by them for his children in such shares as they should determine. The amount of the monthly payments was increased by a supplementary deed executed in Nov. 1930. During the year 1930–31, the whole of the payments under the deeds were distributed by the trustees to various persons & societies under the disponor's directions. On appeal against an assessment to sur-tax for the year 1930–31, the disponor claimed that all the monthly payments as from Apr. 6, 1930, were deductions in arriving at his liability & that Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20, did not apply to the deeds to make the payments part of his income for sur-tax purposes. The Special Comrs. allowed the deductions claimed, except the payments made under the principal deed for the months of Apr., May, June, & July, 1930:—Held: the payments made by the disponor under the deeds did not constitute part of his income for sur-tax purposes.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. NETTLEFOLD, NETTLEFOLD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 235.

689e. Ground rent.—Applt. was one of a group of persons who obtained a lease for ninety-nine years from Dec. 25, 1926, of certain land in the City of London, applt.'s interest being a three-thirty-seconds' share. The agreement for the lease provided for the demolition of the buildings on the site & for the erection of a new building thereon. A ground rent of a peppercorn was payable for the first eighteen months, & thereafter a specified annual rent was payable quarterly, commencing Sept. 29, 1928. The property was assessed under Sched. A., for the year 1928–29 in respect of rents from "hoardings," the amount of the assessment being less than the ground rent payable under the lease for that year. On appeal against the assessment to sur-tax made upon him for the year 1928–29, applt. claimed a deduction of the sum representing his proportion of the ground rent payable during that year. The Special Comrs. decided that the deduction in respect of the ground rent must be restricted to the amount of applt.'s share of the net income tax (Sched. A.) assessment on the property for 1928–29 :—Held : applt. was not entitled to the additional deduction claimed.—SOLOMON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1933), 18 Tax Cas. 227, C. A.

689f. Annuity—Fund appropriated insufficient—Advance charged on residue.—By his will resp.'s father directed that the residue of his estate should be charged with an annuity to resp.'s mother & subject thereto should be held for resp. & his brother equally. The exors. appropriated certain investments as an annuity fund for the purpose of paying the annuity, & they retained other securities for the residuary fund. At the request of resp. & his brother the investments representing the residuary fund were not divided between them. The comrs. held this to be an assent by the exors. to the residuary bequest taking effect. In 1931 the income of the annuity fund was insufficient to pay the annuity. The income of the residuary fund was added, but the income still being insufficient, an overdraft was obtained, secured by the investments representing the residuary fund. Resp. sought to deduct as an annual payment for surtax purposes his share of the amounts borrowed to make up the deficiency in the annuity :—Held : the appropriation of the annuity fund & the assent did not release the residuary fund from the liability to make up any deficiency in the annuity. There was, therefore, no personal liability upon resp. to make any payment in respect of the annuity to bring the case within 1918 Act, s. 27 (1) (b), & the payments made were not made out of property belonging to resp., since under the will the annuitant had a right of recourse to the residuary fund. The deductions could not, therefore, be properly made.—BOWEN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1937] 1 All E. R. 607 ; 81 Sol. Jo. 178 ; 21 Tax Cas. 93, C. A.

691a. — Or settlement.—Where trustees of a settlement set apart certain sums annually for the maintenance of an infant beneficiary & allow the balance of the income to accumulate, the income that is being accumulated is "receivable" by the infant within 1918 Act, s. 5 (3) (c), & he is liable to be assessed to super tax in respect of it. But representative assessments to super tax cannot be made upon the trustees or the guardian of the infant beneficiary, either in respect of the actual total income of the infant, or in respect of a total income limited, as regards the particular trustee or guardian, to that income with which the trust or guardianship is concerned.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 691c. — Payable to or for benefit of infant.—By virtue of or in consequence of any disposition made, directly or indirectly—Mutual trust deeds by brothers in favour of nephews.—Resp., O., on May 28, 1929, covenanted by deed to pay to his brother, W., an annual sum by half-yearly instalments on trust for the infant son of W. until either the expiration of seven years from the date of the deed, or the death of O., or the death of W., or the death of the infant son of W., or the death of the infant son of O., whichever should first happen. By a deed executed on the same date and in identical terms, mutatis mutandis, W. covenanted to pay to O. an annual sum of the same amount as that to be paid to him by O., on trust for the infant son of O., until the happening of either of the same events. It was admitted that resp. would not have made the dispositions made by him for the benefit of his nephew if his brother had not made similar provision for resp.'s own son. Resp. claimed a deduction from his total income for purposes of sur-tax of the annual amount paid by him to his brother, & not to bring into charge the amount paid by his brother to him, on the ground that neither of these sums was "income which was payable to or applicable for the benefit of a child of resp. by virtue or in consequence of any disposition made directly or indirectly by him":—Held: the two deeds must be read together as forming one disposition, & when they were so read, it became apparent that by making a disposition in favour of his nephew resp. directly procured the making of a similar disposition in favour of his own son which fell within Finance Act, 1922 (c. 17), s. 20. Assessment upheld, reversing the decision of the Special Comrs. & resp.'s claim disallowed.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. CLARKSON-WEBB, [1933] 1 K. B. 507; 102 L. J. K. B. 253; 148 L. would yield her, free of all such tax, a cumulative net yearly sum of £3,500, & directed that there should be no apportionment of super tax between the annuity & the rest of his wife's income, but that the whole of the super tax payable by his wife up to but not exceeding super tax on £3,500 a year, with the income tax thereon added to it, should be attributed to the annuity & paid by his trustees:—Held: the trustees were not liable to repay to the annuitant out of residue a sum arrived at on the footing that the annuity was to bear the highest rates of super tax payable on the annuitant's total income, but were liable for no more than what would be payable on a super taxable sum of £3,500 with the income tax added thereto, namely, at the present rate of income tax, £4,200. With the present exemption, from super tax, of the first £2,000 of the income the trustees would thus have to pay the super tax payable on a total income of £6,200.—Re ARMAGHDALE (LORD), CRAIG v. - 27a. Withdrawal — Notice — Notice of insolvency before expiry of withdrawal notice—Effect on right to repayment.]—By the rules of an industrial & provident society incorporated under the Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893 (c. 39), with a capital consisting partly of withdrawable & partly of transferable shares, holders of withdrawable shares could at any time give six months' notice in writing to receive back the money paid up on their shares. An assocn. which was a member of the society gave notice dated Oct. 18, 1929, to withdraw some of its shares, & another notice dated Nov. 5, 1929, to withdraw more of them. On Mar. 18, 1930, the society's board of directors resolved to send out a notice calling an extraordinary general meeting of the society, & the notice was sent out on Apr. 8, 1930. The notice was accompanied by a circular showing that the continuance of the society was practically impossible. The meeting was held on Apr. 30, 1930, & a resolution to wind up was passed. On a summons by the liquidator asking (inter alia) (a) whether notices of withdrawal unexpired before the date of the notice calling the extraordinary general meeting but expired before the date of the winding-up resolution were effectual; & (b) whether the personal representatives of deceased holders of withdrawable shares who had died before the commencement of the liquidation were entitled by reason of the deaths of those shareholders to any priority in respect of repayment:—Held: (1) by the Court of Appeal, the assocn. having had notice during the currency of its withdrawal notices of circumstances which showed that the society could no longer carry on its business as a going concern, was not entitled to repayment on the maturing of its notices; (2) Held: by MAUGHAM, J., personal representatives of deceased shareholders were not entitled to any priority.—Re UNITED CITIZENS' INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD., [1932] 1 Ch. 395; 101 L. Right to inspect books—"Books containing the names of the members"—No right to inspect books containing names & addresses.]—A member of a registered society on Oct. 28, 1932, demanded to see the books containing the names of the members. At that time the only book containing the names of the members was a register containing, in addition to the names, the addresses & particulars of the share holdings of the members. This register was produced, open at the page containing the member's own account, but he was not allowed, as he claimed the right to do, to copy the names & addresses of the other members. Ultimately the society undertook to allow him to inspect the books containing the names of the members, & on Jan. 2, 1933, books prepared for the purpose, containing only a complete list of the names of the members without addresses or other particulars, were produced to him. The member was not entitled to see the register, & the books produced on Jan. 2, 1933, were not fabricated, but were properly prepared for the purpose of complying with Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893 (c. 39), s. 17 (1), (2).—*FIRST MORTGAGE CO-OPERATIVE INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. v. so. Loan ultra vires—Guarantee by committee & shareholders—Liability.—An industrial society, registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893 (c. 39), obtained a loan from a bank exceeding the limit of amount allowed for borrowing under their rules. The loan was by way of an overdraft, & was arranged by the Chairman & committee of the society. A guarantee for repayment of the loan was given to the bank, signed by a number of the shareholders who were the members of the managing committee of the society. Subsequently the society got into difficulties, & eventually went into liquidation, & the bank sued on the guarantee. The guarantors admitted liability up to the limit of the borrowing powers allowed under the rules of the society, but they contended that they were not liable for any further sum, such borrowing being ultra vires:—Held: having regard to the position of the guarantors in relation to the society both as shareholders & managing committee, & their knowledge of the limitation on their borrowing powers, their contention was unsustainable, & they were liable for the full amount guaranteed.—*MUNSTER & LEINSTER BANK, LTD. v. respect of goods supplied to the extent of £22 14s. 1d. By a rule of the society, the business was to be conducted as far as possible for ready money, & credit was not to exceed four-fifths of the member's paid up share together with any other money the member might have in the society, & at the end of each quarter the capital was to be reduced by the amount of credit outstanding. It was contended that under the rule it was obligatory on the society to write down the member's capital in liquidation of his debt, & that the debt was therefore reduced accordingly, & debt. was entitled to a set-off against pltf. :—Held : the assignment to pltf. was an assignment subject to equities, & as the liquidator, if he had allowed such a set-off, would have been bound to call for a contribution in the liquidation of the same amount, there could be no such set-off against pltf., & he was entitled to recover the debt in full.—LLOYD v. FRANCIS, [1937] 4 All E. R. 489; 158 L. T. 37; 54 T. L. R. 134; 81 Sol. Jo. 1021, C. A.

- 96a. — Right to prove for loan—Ultra vires borrowing—Loan used to pay trading debts.]—The A. Co-operative Manufacturing Society entered into an agreement in 1882 with the C. Co-operative Society, one of its customers & shareholders, that all sums representing interest on the shares held by the C. Society in the A. Society together with all dividends declared on such shares, & with all bonuses on purchases made by the C. Society from the A. Society, should not be paid when due but retained as loans to the A. Society; & from that date all such moneys upon becoming payable were transferred to a loan account & entered in an investment book of the A. Society. In that year the C. Society had subscribed & paid for 10 £1 shares in the A. Society, & in 1891 they acquired 10 more £1 shares. The loans so made were within the rules & the borrowing powers of the A. Society until Nov. 1884, when new rules were adopted, & then the said loans thereby became ultra vires the A. Society. In 1931 a resolution was passed for the voluntary winding-up of the A. Society. The C. Society carried in a proof for £523 0s. 6d. as due to them in respect of moneys advanced on loan under the said agreement. The liquidator rejected the proof on the ground that the debt was entirely contracted ultra vires the A. Society :—Held : (1) so much of the proof as represented moneys advanced on loan before the new rules of Nov. 1884, came into force must be admitted as being intra vires the society; (2) although the balance of the loan was incurred ultra vires the society, there was uncontradicted evidence that the moneys so borrowed were used in paying the proper trading debts of the A. Society, & were necessary to enable the receipts to balance the expenditure, & therefore on the equitable doctrine of subrogation the C. Society was entitled to rank as a creditor & to prove for the full amount of the loan.—Re AIREDALE CO-OPERATIVE WORSTED MANUFACTURING SOCIETY, LTD., [1933] Ch. 639; 102 L. J. Ch. 229; 149 L. operative Agricultural Society, Ltd., was incorporated & registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893. The committee were empowered by the rules of the society to obtain loans "to an extent not exceeding such amount as may be authorised by a general meeting." The rules further provided that, for the purpose of securing advances, the society might issue to every member such number of loan guarantee shares of the nominal value of £1 each as would be equal to the number of ordinary shares held by each such member, & that each member should be bound to apply for, & accept, allotment of such loan guarantee shares when making application for ordinary shares. When the allotment of the ordinary shares of the Society took place, no loan guarantee shares were then issued or applied for. In consequence of losses which the society incurred, the committee found it necessary to obtain a bank overdraft amounting to £1,700. Subsequent trading proved unsuccessful, & in the year 1925 seven members of the committee gave their personal guarantees to the N. Banking Co., Ltd., in respect of the society's indebtedness. Notices were sent out convening a special meeting of the society & intimating that members would be asked to apply for loan guarantee shares, & that, failing applications, such shares would be issued to members to the extent to which they were obliged to accept the same. This meeting was held, & no applications for loan guarantee shares being received, such shares were forthwith allotted to members in accordance with the terms of the notice convening the meeting. An order for the winding up of the society was made, & the chief clerk included in the list of contributories the names of the persons to whom loan guarantee shares had been allotted. The members affected moved to vary the chief clerk's certificate on the ground that they had been wrongly included in the list of contributories :—Held : the liability of each member to accept loan guarantee shares was an original liability from the time of his joining the society, & applts. were liable, as contributories, in respect of the loan guarantee shares allotted to them.—Re FOREGLAN CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY, LTD., [1930] N. 1. 114.—1R.

813a. Payment of income from contingent interest to person over twenty-one—Trust not carrying intermediate income—Protective trust.]—Testator, who died on June 12, 1931, by his will gave his residuary estate upon trust, as to two-thirds thereof to his son J., & settled that share upon trust during the life of his said son upon the protective trusts contained in Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 33, & after the son's death upon trust for the son's children & in default of children for testator's daughter Mrs. P. & her children, save & except that (a) whilst the son should be living & under the age of thirty years, the trustees should accumulate the income of the son's share in augmentation & so as to follow the destination of the capital of his share, & (b) if the son should attain the age of thirty-five years & no act or event should have been done or happened whereby his share would, if subject to an absolute trust for payment thereof to him, have become vested or charged in favour of some other person, the trustees should pay one-half of the share of the son to him for his own absolute use & benefit. The son J., who was born on July 9, 1905, at the date of testator's death had attained twenty-one & would not attain the age of thirty-five until July 6, 1940. In pursuance of the directions, in the will, the trustees accumulated & invested the income of the son's settled share. The question was whether, having regard to Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31, the son was entitled to be paid the income arisen & to arise between the death of testator & the son's attainment of the age of thirty years in respect of the moiety of his settled share in the residuary estate of testator, until the happening of any event which would defeat his contingent right to a transfer of that moiety upon his attaining the age of thirty-five years, or whether the said income must be accumulated until such moiety should become transferable to him:—Held: Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31 (1) (ii), which imposed upon the trustees of the moiety of the son's settled share, to the income of which he was only contingently entitled on attaining the age of thirty-five years, a trust to pay to him the income thereof until the happening of either of the events in the clause mentioned, did not apply, because, owing to the possibility of a forfeiture of the said income under the protective trusts in the will, the trust did not carry the intermediate income in accordance with the requirements of Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31 (3). But for sub-sect. (3), notwithstanding sect. 69 of the Act (which is concerned only with powers conferred by the Act), the imperative direction in sect. 31 (1) (ii) to pay the income to the son would override the trust to accumulate the income contained in the will, which is inconsistent with the application of sect. 31 (1) (ii).

813b. —.]—A testator gave one-fifth of the residue of his estate to those children of his son who should be living at his death & should attain or have attained 28 years. He laid down a complete code of maintenance directing the trustees to accumulate the income during the suspense of absolute vesting of any share. At his death three members of the class were living. Two attained 28 years & their shares vested; the third attained 21 after testator's death, but died a bachelor & intestate at 24. His estate, which was substantial, went to his mother, & his unvested share went to the two surviving members of the class. The accumulated income of his unvested share totalled about £3,000. Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31 (1) (ii), provides that if a person over 21 has a contingent interest in a fund, the trustees shall pay the income to him, & if this section were held to apply to the income of the unvested share, the accumulated income should have formed part of the deceased's estate. On an originating summons issued by the trustees to decide this question, it was held that the sect. imposed an imperative trust & did not confer a power. Defts., the mother & the survivors of the class appealed:—Held: (1) as Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), is a consolidating Act, the legislature could not have intended to change the existing law established by Law of Property Act, 1922 (c. 16), s. 88, under which the direction to pay over accumulations to the contingent beneficiary was made subject to a contrary direction in the trust instrument; (2) the totality of the provision of Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31, is one of "the powers conferred by this Act" within sect. 69 (2), & therefore only applies in the absence of a contrary direction in the instrument; (3) the direction contained in sect. 31 (1) (ii) is an essential part of the new statutory power of maintenance & ancillary to it.—Re TURNER'S WILL TRUSTS, DISTRICT BANK, LTD. v. 831a. Ascertainment of period of twenty-one years.]—Testator, who died in Nov. 1893, gave his net residue, subject to certain life annuities which did not exhaust the income, in trust for a bachelor's children who should attain twenty-one, with a gift over in default. In Mar. 1896, the judge ordered the surplus income to be accumulated for twenty-one years from testator's death, i.e., until Nov. 6, 1914, or until the bachelor's previous death without leaving issue. During this twenty-one years' period the bachelor married & died leaving three children, two of whom were still living. Temporary orders for maintenance were made. In Nov. 1914, the judge declared that as from Nov. 6, 1914, the two children then living were entitled to maintenance under Conveyancing Act, 1881

(c. 41), s. 43 (1), but that notwithstanding sub-sect. 2 any income not so applied passed as on an intestacy. In July, 1927, the elder child attained twenty-one, & her contingent moiety vested in possession. The question having arisen whether, having regard to Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 165, the order of Nov. 1914 ought still to be acted on with regard to the younger child's contingent moiety:—Held: (1) the effect of sect. 165 was that the years of minority accumulation, which commenced during the twenty-one years' period, were not to be reckoned in ascertaining that period, & the income of the younger child's contingent moiety must in the first place be applied for her maintenance under Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 43 (1), & the balance could be validly accumulated under sub-sect. 2; (2) quite apart from sect. 165, the moment the elder child attained a vested interest as a member of the contingent class, there could be no question of intestacy as to any part of the capital or income.—Re MABER, WARD v. 889a. —. —. —.]—A testator by his will bequeathed to his trustees a certain sum upon trust to invest it & to accumulate the income thereof for 21 years & thereafter to pay one-third of the income of the sum & the accumulations to his son E. during his life & after his death or from the expiration of the 21 years if E. should have died before the expiration thereof upon trust for such one or more of E.'s issue as he should by deed, will or codicil appoint, & in default of such appointment upon trust for all his children as should attain 21, & if more than one in equal shares, provided that notwithstanding the trust for accumulation the trustees might out of the income, investments or accumulations pay in respect of the maintenance or education of E.'s children for the time being under 21 any amount not exceeding £100 per annum. Testator died on Feb. 10, 1915. E. married in 1913 & had two sons, born respectively in 1916 & 1922. E.'s wife obtained a divorce in 1928 & was granted custody of the children, & by orders for permanent maintenance E. was directed to pay a certain annual sum to his wife & £150 & £100 per annum free of tax in respect of the two children. E. died in 1935 without having exercised his power of appointment. After E.'s death his wife paid for the maintenance of the children out of her own income. The trust for accumulation having come to an end on Feb. 10, 1936, the children issued a summons asking that £350 per annum free of tax might be allowed by the surviving trustee for the maintenance & education of each of the children as from that date, & by amendment the summons further asked whether the trustee had power under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43, to apply the income of each child's contingent interest in the trust fund in respect of the moneys expended in the past by their mother for the children's maintenance. The trustee in his discretion was not prepared to pay as much as £350 per annum in respect of each child:—Held: (1) no order should be made in respect of allowances for the children's maintenance; (2) there was no power under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43, for the trustee to recoup the mother for the money expended out of her own income for the children's maintenance.—*Re SENIOR, SENIOR v. 1058b. —.]—Under a will the trustees were directed to hold the testator's residuary trust fund, subject to the payment of an annuity, upon trust for his children who should attain the age of twenty-one years. The trustees were to retain the shares, & between the ages of twenty-one & twenty-five pay the income to the children or apply the same for their benefit, & accumulate the balance (if any) thereof, & after the age of twenty-five to pay the accumulations & the income to the children during their lives, & to hold the capital, including accumulations made during minority, for the children of each child who should attain twenty-one years, with gifts over to the other children of the shares of any dying without issue:—Held: the trustees had power under Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31, to apply intermediate income in the maintenance & education of the testator's infant children. Sect. 31 has in this respect made no alteration in the law contained in Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43, & the decisions thereunder.—*Re LENG, DODSWORTH v. The residue of his estate he left in lieu to his wife & in fee to his children equally. In a question as to whether the wife's lieu or the income of the children's legacies was liable primo loco for the cost of maintaining & educating the children:—Held: as the children were vested in separate estate, the cost of their maintenance & education fell to be met in the first place out of the income of that estate.—*KER'S TRUSTEES v. 10561. Expression of contrary intention—What constitutes—Direction for accumulation of income until contingency.—Testator bequeathed to each of his four daughters the sum of £1,000 if & when she should attain the age of 21, & in the meantime he directed that the money should be lodged on deposit receipt in a bank in the joint names of his trustees & each of his daughters, & should so remain during the minority of each daughter, & on each daughter attaining the age of 21 the amount, with the accrued interest, was to be paid to her. & testator directed that his trustees should not otherwise invest the said moneys. Should any daughter die before attaining the age of 21, her legacy, with the accumulation of income, was to be divided equally among the surviving daughters. Testator devised & bequeathed all the remainder of his property to his son if & when his son should attain the age of 21, provided that during the minority of his son the income of testator's lands was to be paid to testator's wife for the support of herself & the children, & they were to have a right of residence in the testator's dwelling-house. The residue of testator's property, other than his lands, house property, & the furniture in his dwelling-house, was to be sold, & the sum realised placed on deposit receipt in a bank in the joint names of his trustees, & not otherwise invested, the interest thereon to accumulate, & the accumulation thereof with the principal to be paid to the testator's son on his attaining the age of 21. Provision was then made in the event of the son dying before attaining age. The income derived from the lands was found to be inadequate for the support of testator's wife & children:—Held: (1) the ct. had jurisdiction to apply the income derived from the money representing the legacies bequeathed to each of the children towards the maintenance, support, & education of each such child during his or her minority if the ct. was of opinion that the moneys otherwise available for such maintenance, support, & education were insufficient, the direction in the will for the accumulation of income until each child should attain the age of 21 not being the expression of a "contrary intention" within Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43 (3), which would prevent the application of sub-sect. 1 of that section; (2) the ct. had jurisdiction to disregard the direction as to the lodgments of the amounts of the legacies on deposit receipt & to direct them to be invested in suitable securities, as the predominating object of testator, as expressed in his will, was to provide for the distribution of his property between his widow & children when the children came of age, & pending that period, for their suitable support, maintenance, & education; &, as the direction in the will that the amounts should remain on deposit receipt was subsidiary thereto & was in conflict therewith, it must give way & be disregarded.—*Re LYNCH'S TRUSTS, LYNCH v. 1083a. Deposit with Lloyds.—A testatrix had given her son a power of attorney in very wide terms over certain shares & money standing in her name at a bank abroad. When about to undergo an operation she told the son to get such shares & money transferred into his own name, as she wanted him to have them if anything should happen to her. The son accordingly, acting as her agent under the power of attorney, instructed the bank to transfer the shares & money into his name. The testatrix died a few days later. The question arose as to whether there had been a good donatio mortis causa of the shares & money or whether they formed part of the estate of the testatrix. By her will the testatrix gave her trustees a power of advancement in favour of the son (inter alia) for "the purchase of a business or a share in a business":—Held: the power of advancement did not extend to an advance of a sum to be applied & invested with the trustees of Lloyd's as a fund which would be available to meet the son's liabilities, so as to enable him to become an underwriter at Lloyd's.—*Re CRAVEN'S ESTATE, LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. ### PART XI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 4.—A.

1126 iv. —.]—A child is further protected by Children's Protection Act, R. S. O. 1927, c. 279, s. 25 (3), which provides that when it has been abandoned or deserted, or has been allowed by the parent to be brought up by a Children's Aid Society, or by another person, in circumstances which show that the parent was unmindful of his parental duties, the judge shall not give the child to the parent, unless satisfied that, having regard to the welfare of the child, he is a fit person to have the custody of it. When once a child has been taken from its parents & made a ward of a Children's Aid Society & then placed out with foster parents, the parents have forfeited their natural rights, & others have acquired rights. The words "having regard to the welfare of the child" indicate that the intention of the statute is that the judge, in determining whether the parent is a fit person to have the child restored to him, should contrast the situation of the child in the care of its foster parents with that which it would occupy if restored to its natural parents.—Re CHIEMLEWSKI, [1928] 2 D. S. S. 1920, c. 155, s. 7 (b). Therefore, although the ct. concludes that the parent has not been "unmindful of his parental duties" within said section, it should not, nevertheless, order the child to be restored to him if in its opinion the child's welfare in the widest sense, i.e. its material, moral, religious & physical well-being, requires that the order should be refused.—*Re ROSS, ROSS v. The mother made no inquiries as to the provision which the father was able to make for its care, nor did she afterwards make any inquiries as to its welfare. The father having died, the mother brought an action for delivery of the child against relatives of the father, in whose care the child had been placed by him. Circumstances in which the ct. ordered delivery of the child to the mother. Semble: the mother had not abandoned the child within Custody of Children Act, 1891 (c. 3).—M'LEAN v. HARDIE, [1927] S. The child was five years old & the mother had recently married a Chinese who had suitable accommodation for himself & wife & the child; he wished his wife to have the child & said he was able to support them. 1252 i. — Husband against wife—Child out of the jurisdiction.—Upon an appln. under Infants' Act, R. S. O., c. 186, by the father of an infant, for an order for the custody of the infant, it was held as the infant was not at the time resident in Ontario, the Supreme Ct. of Ontario had no jurisdiction. As the procedure under Infants' Act is an alternative procedure to the procedure by writ of habeas corpus, the jurisdiction must be limited to cases where a writ would be granted; & a writ will not be granted where the person directed to be produced in ct. is without the jurisdiction. It is only in extraordinary circumstances that the ct. will appoint a guardian to an infant who resides abroad, & has no property in the jurisdiction; & in this case the circumstances were not so extraordinary as to call for the exercise of this jurisdiction.—Re SHAND, [1928] 2 D. children. By a later ordinance he dissolved the marriage; & in Mar. 1936, he made a similar ordinance as to the custody of the children:—Held: on these facts pltf. was the lawful guardian & entitled to the custody of Prince Rainier, & it was ordered that defd. do deliver him to pltf. or to such other person as he, the prince, should authorise to receive him, & an injunction to restrain defd. from removing the young prince out of the United Kingdom without pltf.'s consent. Pltf. to have the costs of the action.—*MONACO v. 1253a. Order giving custody to mother under Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 7—Appeal—Whether security for costs ordered.—A wife obtained from the justices an order under Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 7, giving her the custody of the child of the marriage. The husband appealed against the order to a judge of the Chancery Div. & the wife applied for an order for security for her costs in the appeal, on the ground that she was not in a financial position to resist the appeal without some assistance or security. There was no evidence that the husband would not be able to pay the wife's costs if he were unsuccessful in his appeal:—Held: there were no special circumstances to justify the ct. in making the order asked for. The application must be dealt with in accordance with the usual practice of cts. of appeal in ordering security for costs of an appeal & not in accordance with the practice of the Divorce Ct. in ordering security for a wife's costs.—*Re THOMSETT, THOMSETT v. iii. Implied right of further application.—Necessity for change of circumstances.—The principle that orders as to the custody of children are subject to further application & are to be treated as if expressed to be made "until further order" does not enable applications for custody to be made from time to time under the same circumstances as those which existed at the time the existing order for custody was made. An order awarding the custody of a child is subject to the doctrine of res judicata with respect to all questions affecting the matter up to the time it was rendered. If, however, a change is shown to have arisen in the circumstances of the parties since the order was made which warrants a reconsideration of the question, the ct. will not be bound by the order, but will use its discretion in view of the altered conditions, always keeping in mind the fact that the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration.—WALLIS v. WALLIS & GRANT, [1929] 2 D. L. R. 253; 1 W. W. R. 631; 23 S. L. R. 489.—CAN.

iv. Order not final.—An order for custody of an infant is never final in the sense that it cannot be changed & while it is better for an infant generally that its custody should not be changed back & forth, yet it is much more desirable that it should be changed than that it should remain where it is not in the best interest of the child that it should be.—CAIRNS v. CAIRNS (No. 2), [1932] 1 W. W. R. 364; 1 D. L. R. 774; 2 Alta. L. R. 145.—CAN.

sd. — On jurisdiction to make order as to custody.—In an action in which pltf. (the husband) was granted a decree nisi for divorce his prayer for relief asked for an order as to the custody of a child which had been adopted by the parties by order of a ct. in Alberta. The child was in the custody of defd.; & pltf. contended that its welfare would be best served by leaving the child with her for the present, although he did not repudiate or seek to avoid responsibility for its care & maintenance. It appeared that at the time of the adoption the adopting parents were domiciled in Saskatchewan & that the child was described as of Calgary:—Held: the effect of the Saskatchewan & Alberta legislation providing for the adoption of children was to bring the question to be decided in this case within the English decisions as to children alleged to be legitimated by subsequent marriage, wherein it was held that an order for custody implies a declaration of legitimacy & cannot be made by the ct. in divorce proceedings where the child & other parties possibly interested are not & cannot be represented. However, the ct. under its general jurisdiction in respect of infants, which is that of the High Court of Justice in England, should direct that the care & control of the child should remain until further order in pltf.—*CULVER v. sf. By agreement.—Under Child Welfare Act, C. A., 1924, c. 30, as amended in 1926, c. 4, s. 15, a person who, when a child within the said Act, was adopted under an agreement entered into prior to Sept. 1, 1921, between a person having his or her legal guardianship, & the adopting parent has the same status, including the right of inheriting from his or her foster parents dying after said amendment, except as to property expressly limited to heirs of the body, as if he or she were their child by natural birth, whether or not said adopted person was a "child" when the amendment came into force, & is, therefore, to be deemed the child of the foster parents for the purposes of Life Insurance Act, C. A., 1924, c. 99. The Act does not, however, create a new canon for the construction of wills. Therefore, where the adopted daughter was the niece of the foster father's wife, & his will, after making provision for said adopted daughter by name, gave part of the residue of his estate to his & his wife's next-of-kin, the daughter took under the residuary bequest as his wife's niece & not as testator's child.—Re SCOTT ESTATE, [1928] 1 W. sz. Registration of adoption.—An authority to adopt was presented for registration by the adoptive son's natural father, who was then his nearest male agnate, treating the son as having passed into the adoptive family. Registration was effected, the registering officer having satisfied himself, as required by sect. 41, that the person presenting was entitled to do so according to sect. 40, & it not having been objected that he was not so entitled:—Held: the document was duly registered, since the natural father, as the adoptive son's nearest male agnate, was the proper person to act as his natural guardian in the absence of any guardian judicially appointed; further, that any doubt upon the facts was removed by the certificate of the registering officer.—*VENKATAPPA v. The female appct. & the infant were within the degrees of con-

Said provisions gave to a child adopted thereunder the capacity of inheriting from the adopting parents as fully as their child by natural birth:—Held: on the facts, the adoption agreements had ceased to exist before any statute giving a right of inheritance was passed & the claimants had not shown that on any reasonable view of the facts the agreements should be considered to have been either revived or continued by the statutes subsequently enacted.—Re YOUNG ESTATE, [1935] 2 W. judge refused to continue the injunction until trial, & ptf. brought an interlocutory appeal from said refusal; an interim injunction was granted until the hearing of the appeal, but ptf. had been dismissed & a successor appointed before the order was served. Ptf. nevertheless, contended that said dismissal & appointment made since service of the notice of appeal were null & void & consequently, though ptf. had been de facto ousted from his office yet he was de jure the lawful occupant thereof & should be so declared by the ct. & reinstated therein up to the trial of the action when the rights of the parties could be determined after all the evidence on both sides had been fully heard & considered, which it was impossible to do at that early state of the proceedings when not even the pleadings defining the issues had been filed. Since the argument on the appeal a bill had passed its third reading in the legislature which purports to abolish from the time it receives the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor the present board of police comrs., composed of defts., & to create a new tribunal:—Held: since the intervention of the legislature as aforesaid it could not be seriously suggested that the new tribunal, specially created by statute for the express purpose (inter alia) of remedying the existing situation in Vancouver, should not be resorted to without delay for a reconsideration of the whole proceedings involved herein, particularly when the majority of its members will be judicial officers; such being the new situation that had arisen on the appeal it was clear that the case had now at least become one (however it might have been regarded before) wherein it would not be "just or convenient," as the Judicature Act says, from any point of view, to grant the interim injunction as prayed.—*EDGETT v. Despite the protests of the co., no effort had been made by defts. to conduct their operations during hours when business would not be affected, or during ordinary business hours in some less noisy method. Such an alternative method could be used, though only at an increase in the cost & duration of the operations:—Held: defts. were bound to take, & had not taken, all reasonable precautions to minimise the nuisance created by them, & the injunction should be continued until the hearing of the suit to restrain the use of the drills during certain specified hours.—*DAILY TELEGRAPH Co., LTD. v. ### PART VIII., SECT. 5.

ss. Whether plaintiff disentitled to relief.—It is not every failure by the covenantor to observe stipulations entered into as part of transactions in which the covenant was given that disentitles the covenantor to an injunction. If by reason of the covenantor's own failure to perform interdependent covenants made by him, the covenant has ceased to bind the covenantor at law, there is no obligation to enforce by injunction. But there may be cases, both in covenant & in simple contract, where, although the obligation for the enforcement of which an injunction is sought continues to subsist at law, either because there has been an election to affirm, or because a right to treat the obligation as discharged did not arise, yet in equity an injunction would be refused because it would be inequitable to require the obligation to be carried out specifically by a person who has through the default of the other contracting party failed to obtain a material part of the consideration which induced him to enter into the obligation.—*PEARSON v. Upon leaving pltf.'s service, he entered the service of the second defts., who knew of the terms of the above agreement, & he kept a list of pltf.'s customers in the district in which he travelled & divulged to a considerable extent to the second defts. the terms upon which pltf. did business:—Held: pltf. were entitled to an injunction against both defts., an order for delivery up of papers & books & damages.—*SUMMERS (WILLIAM) & Co., LTD. v. A. V." system, agreed for one year that pltf. should give defts. the "sole selling agency" for the dynamo, which was to be supplied at cost price; defts. were to use their best endeavours to introduce & sell the dynamo, & were not to become directly or indirectly interested in the sale of any other dynamo, & the parties were to mutually communicate improvements in such dynamo. Defts. were to be allowed a commission of 10 per cent. on cost price, & the ultimate profits were to be equally divided, but the agreement was not to create a partnership. Defts. during the pendency of the agreement received certain testimonials. After the termination of the agreement, pltf. brought an action to restrain defts. from using or publishing these testimonials, & moved for an interlocutory injunction:—Held: defts. were sole purchasers or sole consignees of pltf.'s goods upon special terms, that there could not be implied from the agreement a contract between the parties, that all information of which defts. became possessed during the pendency of the agreement should not afterwards be used by defts. for other purposes, & that a fiduciary relationship had not been established between the parties as would have existed had defts. been in pltf.'s agents.—*ACCUMULATOR INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. Deft. on this procedure summons asked for further & better particulars of the secret processes:—Held: deft. was entitled to such particulars, but that they must be disclosed only to three experts not trade rivals of pltf., deft. himself & his legal advisers, & the order must be in such a form as to prevent the persons to whom the secret processes were communicated from disclosing them, & copies of the particulars must be returned to pltf. when the proceedings were closed.—*SORBO RUBBER SPONGE PRODUCTS, LTD. v. 810 v. — — — — —.]—A grocer kept on his premises a soda water fountain, from which he filled empty aerated water bottles tendered to him by members of the public. Among the bottles so tendered were some embossed with the name of a firm of aerated water manufacturers. The manufacturers intimated to the grocer that, when selling their waters, they always retained the property in their bottles, & that, in using their bottles without their consent, the grocer was participating in the illegal use of their property. The grocer having ignored their intimation, the manufacturers sought interdict against his use of their bottles. After a proof as to the circumstances in which the manufacturers allowed to their customers & to the public possession of their bottles:—Held: members of the public were not precluded from acquiring a right to use the manufacturers' bottles, & the tendering by members of the public to the grocer of bottles embossed with the manufacturers' name did not certify the grocer that such bottles were in fact the property of the manufacturers, & the grocer was under no duty to the manufacturers to inquire into the history of each bottle tendered to him; interdict refused.—*LEITCH & Co., LTD. v. Deft. denied that there was any secret process & that he had wrongfully taken & used any information:—Held: deft. had not made or taken away copies of formulæ from the book, which in fact was a costings book, & deft. was not warned as to secrecy when he entered employment in which he learned the processes without difficulty; an injunction would not be granted to prevent using knowledge that had thus become his own; dishonest or surreptitious obtaining of knowledge would have been upon a different footing, but no obligation could be implied not to use knowledge honestly acquired.—UNITED INDIGO CHEMICAL CO., LTD. v. They had been exporting fruit from Colombia for many years, & they had a large number of contracts with the growers of bananas & dealt with about 97 per cent. of the exportable bananas in that country. Under those contracts the bananas which were to be sold to pltfs. became the property of pltfs. as soon as they were severed from the trees. Defts. imported into England a cargo of bananas, under contracts which they had made with a co-operative society formed by some of the banana growers in Colombia, who desired to break down pltfs.' monopoly & find another outlet for their produce. Pltfs. claimed that 2,041 stems of bananas, an unidentified part of the cargo imported by defts., were from growers with whom pltfs. had contracts, or were from estates covered by those contracts, & they obtained an interim injunction restraining defts. from converting to their own use or otherwise dealing with or in any way disposing of bananas, the property of pltfs., save by delivery of the same to pltfs. or their agents:—Held: the order for an interim injunction was unsatisfactory & embarrassing, because (1) the bananas were perishable; (2) the order did not identify the bananas, dealings in which it was sought to restrain; (3) it did not order delivery to pltfs. The order must be varied by ordering the sale of a specified number of bananas to be selected.—UNITED FRUIT CO. v. FREDERICK LEYLAND & Co., LTD. (1930), 144 L. T. 97; 47 T. L. R. 33; 74 Sol. Jo. 735, C. A.

By its arts. of assocn. membership of the society was open to persons qualified in certain ways approved by the council of the society, & paying a certain entrance fee & yearly subscriptions; & members were authorised to use the letters "M. S. A." as a professional designation. Deft., who was an architect, but had never been & was not a member of the society, used the letters "M. S. A." as a professional designation. The society brought an action against him for an injunction, which he did not defend, & by its statement of claim alleged, among other things, that the continuous & exclusive use of the letters by its members had given the letters a definite meaning & value in the minds of the public, & the use of them by unauthorised persons would damage the society. On motion for judgment in default of appearance:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to an injunction.—SOCIETY OF ARCHITECTS v. KENDRICK (1910), 102 L. T. 526; 26 T. L. R. 433.

906b. Use of professional designation implying membership—Of professional institution.]—Pltf. society was incorporated in 1885, under Cos. Act, 1867, as a co. not for gain without the use of the word "limited" under licence of the Board of Trade. In 1886 pltf. society recommended its members to adopt as their professional designation the use after their names of the term "Incorporated Accountant." By 1905 that designation had come to mean to that section of the public who had dealings with accountants a member of the society, which, by its system of tests & examinations, had conferred upon its members the valuable privilege of a recognised status for ability & integrity. In that year deft. association was incorporated under the Cos. Acts as a co. limited by guarantee. Shortly after its incorporation its council recommended its members to adopt the designation "Incorporated Accountant" with the addition of the abbreviation "Lon. Asscn." his business of accountant the designation "incorporated accountant," & (b) an injunction to restrain deft. society from holding out, by advertisements or otherwise, that its members were entitled to use such designation:—Held: the designation "incorporated accountant" was a fancy & not a descriptive term, & had come to denote membership of the society, & therefore, that the unauthorised use of it inflicted an injury on pltf. society, in respect of which it was entitled to maintain an action. Pltf. society had a pecuniary interest in preventing deft. assocn. from attempting, by representations & inducements held out to members of the professions, to reduce the status of pltf. society by conferring improperly an indication of that status. Pltf. society was entitled to the injunctions which it claimed.—SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS & AUDITORS v. GOODWAY & LONDON ASSOCN. OF ACCOUNTANTS, LTD., [1907] 1 Ch. 489; 76 L. J. Ch. 384; 96 L. 959a. Bottles of manufacturer marked with name—Whether refilling by another person restrained.]—Applts., who were manufacturers of aerated water, marked their name on the bottles & claimed an exclusive right of property in them. Resp. was a grocer who had no contractual relationship with applts., & he had in his shop a soda fountain by means of which he supplied customers with aerated beverages for consumption off the premises. The customers had to bring a bottle or other receptacle, & in practice resp. filled it without examination & without inquiring into the customer's right to use it. Occasionally applts.' bottles were used in this way. that he would not, in the event of the termination of that employment, directly or indirectly solicit or influence customers in a certain district for a period of three years. He committed a breach of the covenant, & ptff.
brought an action claiming an injunc-

An interim order was made restraining deflt. until a specified date, & subsewhereby deflt. was restrained from committing, or attempting to commit, any breach of the covenant, simpliciter,

the order operated:—Held: the in-

As far as appeared his only object in going to the house was to meet his friend. In an action against the landlord for negligence in not fencing the hole, & in which pltf. alleged that he was in the house as a guest, the jury found for pltf. The ct. refused a rule to enter a nonsuit, which was asked for on the ground that there was no evidence, either of negligence on the part of deft., or of pltf. being in the house as a guest.—*AXFORD v. While there, wishing to find a water-closet, he passed along an unlighted passage & through a door marked "Private." He then attempted to switch on the light but failed & upon taking a further step forward he fell down some steps & injured himself.—*Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover as it was not the duty of an innkeeper to maintain in a safe condition those portions of his premises where the public are not likely to resort.—LEE v. - 138a. Extent of duty.—An innkeeper is bound to supply only such accommodation for his guests & their goods as he in fact possesses, & undertakes only that the accommodation which he offers is reasonably fit for that purpose. He is not an insurer of his guest's goods against injury, though, subject to Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863 (c. 41), he may be considered an insurer of them against loss. In the case of injury to the goods, he is responsible only if negligence on his part is proved. A guest at an hotel that was an inn placed his motor car in the hotel garage, a building suitable for protecting a car in ordinary weather, but not suitable for protecting a car with water in the radiator or

The mere omission to demand payment before the guest was given possession of a room at the monthly rate does not give him the right to occupy the room for a month, regardless of his ability to pay.—*BELLAIRS v. xx. For breach of contract—Special contract to receive.—Held: the fact that pltf. was received under a special contract did not deprive him of his ordinary rights as a guest, but his claim in that capacity to damages was denied; he could not sue in contract & in tort. It was the contract duty of defts. to furnish him with a room at no more than $1.50 a day; if they had no room at that price, another just as good should have been furnished at that price. The contract was broken by debarring pltf. from his room without giving him another room & by ordering him out of the house.—*LIPPERT v. FORD HOTEL OF TORONTO, LTD., [1930] 3 D. L. R. 722; 65 O. L. 118 i. Reasonable care—Limited to rooms where guest likely to go.—While a person in attendance at a banquet given by an assocn. in a hotel is an invitee of the hotel proprietor, & not a mere licensee, the extent of the invitation is of the utmost importance,

& if an accident happens & the invitation did not extend to the time & place is circumstances of the accident, then the question whether the proprietor & liable is to be determined in view of the duty which he owes to a mere licensee.

Where a guest at such a banquet in deft.'s hotel, after the conclusion thereof, met his death by falling into a private-service elevator shaft:—Held: deft. was not liable.—KNIGHT v. GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC DEVELOPMENT CO., [1927] 1 D. L. R. 498; [1926] S. C. R. 674.—CAN.

123 i. Invited visitor.—In an action for damages for injuries resulting from a fall sustained when entering deft.'s hotel on a visit to one of the sample rooms:—*Held: the action must be dismissed, since the slope on which pltf. fell was not a "trap," & she had previous knowledge of it.—WAY v. water jacket in time of severe frost. During his stay at the hotel there was a frost of great severity, & the water in the water jacket became frozen & the engine of the car was damaged:—Held: in relation to the car the innkeeper's duties were those of an innkeeper only, he was not negligent in not emptying the water from the water jacket, & in the absence of negligence, he was not liable for the damage to the car.—*WINKWORTH v. While the guest was at dinner at the hotel the car was stolen:—Held: there had been no alteration in the law regarding the liability of an innkeeper for the loss of goods brought on his premises by a guest, & where the relationship of innkeeper & guest existed as regards eating & drinking, that relationship extended also to the vehicle of the guest brought by him to the inn, & the common law rule still applied & was not affected by Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863 (c. 41).—*ARIA v. 186a. — On Oct. 30, 1929, about 5.30 p.m., pltf. & her husband arrived at defts.' hotel with their suit cases & engaged a room for the night with a view to attending a dance in the neighbourhood. After having tea in their room they dressed for the dance. Pltf., having replaced a diamond ring which she was wearing by a pearl ring, put the diamond ring into a jewel-case & placed that in her suit case, which she latched but did not lock. When they went down to dinner pltf.'s husband locked the door of their room & took the key with him. After dinner they returned to their room, & on leaving it to go to the dance pltf.'s husband again locked the door & then handed the key in at the hotel office. About 2.30 a.m. the following morning they returned to their room in the hotel, having got the key from the hall porter. On getting up between 8 & 9 a.m. pltf. opened her suit case & jewel case & found that the diamond ring was missing. Defts. were immediately informed of the loss & search was made for the ring, but without result. Defts. had exhibited in the hotel a copy of Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863 (c. 41), s. 1, & in the room occupied by pltf. a notice that all articles of value should be deposited at the office. Pltf. brought an action in the county ct. against defts. as insurers for damages for having failed to keep the ring safely. At the trial the above facts were proved or admitted, & it was found as a fact that the pltf. had taken reasonable care of the ring; but the judge, thinking that he was bound to do so by a previous case, gave judgment for defts. On appeal to the Div. Ct.:—Held: there was evidence to support the finding that pltf. had taken reasonable care of the ring & accordingly that the loss of it was not due to negligence on her part; the fact that she had not deposited the ring at the office in compliance with the notice did not imply that she had retained the protection of it in her own hands to the relief of defts.; & therefore that she was entitled to judgment against defts. in the action.—*CARPENTER v. An inn was entered by a vestibule which led to a lounge, & from this lounge a corridor, in which was the reception office, led to the staircase & dining-room of the hotel. The notice was exhibited in this corridor above a chocolate case some 6 ft. from the ground:—Held: the notice was not exhibited in compliance with the Act in a conspicuous part of the hall or entrance to the inn.—SHACKLOCK v. One of the conditions of the policy was in much smaller print than other parts of the policy & was as follows: "In case of loss or damage to the property hereby insured the loss shall be reported to the representatives of the co., or, if there be no representative of the co., to Lloyd's agent, as soon as the goods are landed or the loss is known or expected." On the day after the arrival of the goods at Tunis the consignee sold them to pltf., who found them to have been damaged by salt water. In an action by pltf. on the certificate of insurance deft. co. contended, (1) that pltf. was not the right person to sue, & (2) that the clause in the policy as to giving notice

sa. Allegation of fraud—By insurers against agent—Onus on insurers.—Pltfs. produced at the trial an original policy & a renewal certificate covering the date in question. The insurers contended, nevertheless, that the renewal premium had not in fact been paid before the date of the accident, & attempted to establish their position by showing that their own agent had been guilty of a fraud, for the benefit of himself or the insured or both, in concocting evidence to show that the premium had been paid in time:—Held: the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of fraud & the insurers had, therefore, failed to meet the onus on them of meeting the prima facie case made out by the production of the policy & renewal receipt.—WESTERN FINANCE CORPORATION, LTD. v. 143a. Valuation of property—Speculative prospect of appreciation.]—If in a proposal to effect an insurance upon property the value put upon the property by the assured is based upon what he believes to be a reasonable prospect of appreciation, he must make it plain to the insurer that the value stated is not immediate but speculative. If the assured does not make this disclosure to the insurer, the insurance will be void even though the statement of value by the assured does not amount to a conscious & deliberate overvaluation.—HOFF TRADING Co. v. UNION INSURANCE SOCIETY OF CANTON, LTD. (1929), 45 T. L. R. 466, C. A.

149a. Falsity known to insurer's clerk—Whether insurer estopped from repudiating policy.]—If it is established by evidence that the duty of investigating & ascertaining facts has been delegated in the ordinary course of a co.'s business to a subordinate official, the co. will, in law, be bound by his knowledge in the same way as it is affected by the knowledge of the board of directors.

The claimant signed a proposal form for the insurance of his motor car with resps. That form contained (inter alia) the following questions: "For how long has proposer & proposer's driver (i) held a driving licence, (ii) had a practical experience of motor car driving?" to which the answer given was "5 years." That answer was untrue as referring to the experience of & length of licence held by the claimant. A policy was duly issued, containing a clause that the truth of the statements in the proposal form should be a condition precedent to liability on the part of resps. During the currency of the policy an accident occurred resulting in damage to the car & injuries to third parties, whereupon the claimant made a claim under the policy, in which, in answer to the question how long he had been driving motors, he answered, "six weeks." That document, together with the proposal form, was handed to resps.' claims superintendent, who was authorised to deal with such matters, & was passed on by him, in accordance with the practice of the office, to a clerk for the purpose of checking the statements they contained & noting any discrepancies therein. The clerk noticed the discrepancy but did not call attention to it, considering it of no importance. Thereafter resps. paid the claim in respect of damage to the car & certain medical expenses, & took over the negotiation of the claims by third parties, but before settling these the claims superintendent became aware of the discrepancy between the statements in the proposal form & those in the claim form, whereupon resps. repudiated liability. In arbn. proceedings the umpire held that resps. could not repudiate liability after having obtained the information they had received through their agents, & notwithstanding that information, having paid the claimant & taken over the right of dealing with the third-party claims:—Held: the umpire's finding was justified on the evidence inasmuch as the knowledge of the clerk to whom was delegated, in accordance with the ordinary practice of the office, the duty of comparing the claim form with the proposal form, must be imputed to resps., who were therefore not entitled in the circumstances to rely on the discrepancy & to repudiate liability under the policy.—*EVANS v. 157 iv. ———.]—Where in a contract of insurance a provision for subrogation contains no limitations or restrictions the insurer's right of subrogation should not be restricted within narrower limits than equity would have given him in the absence of the provision. A motion by the insurer under such a contract for an order compelling the insured to permit the former to use the latter's name in suing third parties was therefore allowed, where the insured pressed for the order because of its belief that the cause of the loss might eventually be found to have been the result of a tort rather than a breach of contract.—*NORTHERN ASSOC. Act, & therefore, in view of the weight of opinion on the interpretation of the latter Act, the said provision of the Insurance Act does not entitle the insurer to become the assignee of part only of the insured's claim. Therefore where only part of his claim is assigned to the insurer, the action against the third party must be brought in the insured's name.—MITCHELL v. WORMWORTH, [1930] 1 W. W. R. 961.—CAN.

The agent was not authorised by the insurance co. to fill in proposal forms, & it did not appear that the co. knew that he had in fact done so. His duties were to procure persons to effect insurances & to see, as far as he could, that proposal forms were correctly filled up; he was not authorised to give a cover note or to enter into a policy of insurance. A policy was issued to the person who had signed the proposal form, & during its currency he made a claim under it, but the insurance co. repudiated liability on the ground of the untrue statements in the proposal form:—Held: the agent of the insurance co. in filling in the proposal form was merely the amanuensis of the proposer, that the knowledge of the true facts by the agent could not be imputed to the insurance co., & therefore that the insurance co. was entitled to repudiate liability on the ground of the untrue statements in the proposal form.—NEWS-

No such permit had been given. The property was unoccupied at the time the application for insurance was made, & pltf. had no intention of making a false statement upon this point. 203a. ——— Refusal of company to insure.—Applts. were in possession of a motor car under a hire-purchase agreement, it being a term of the agreement that they would insure the car with the B. insurance co. The B. co. refused to accept the insurance "owing to information received" & told applts.' brokers that this was their reason for refusal; but the brokers did not communicate the fact to applts., but told them that the B. co. had refused the insurance because they did not cover that class of car. Applts.' brokers then succeeded in obtaining an insurance of the car with the L. co., but when the original period of that insurance was coming to an end the L. co. wrote that they could not invite renewal. Applts. had not in fact wished for a renewal & had not made any application to the L. co., & they then effected an insurance with the present resps. The proposal form of resps. contained a number of questions & a stipulation that the truth of the answers to those questions should be the basis of the contract. To a question "Has any co. or underwriter declined to insure?" applts. answered, No; the fact being that without applts.' knowledge the B. co. had declined to accept their insurance, & the L. co., as applts. were aware, had intimated that they would not renew. Applts. claimed on their policy with resps., & resps. refused to pay, on the ground that the question in the proposal form had been answered untruly & that there had been concealment of a material fact. Applts. brought an action on the policy & the judge, by whom the action was tried, gave judgment for resps. Applts. appealed:—Held: as regards the B. co. the answer of applts. was untrue, & the fact that they were unaware of its untruth was immaterial; & as regards the L. co., although there had been no refusal to renew because there had not been any actual request for renewal the intimation that the co. would not invite renewal was a material fact which ought to have been disclosed to resps., & was in fact if not in words a refusal to insure within the meaning of the question.—*HOLT'S MOTORS, LTD. v. The claimant on being informed of this signed a proposal form for a policy & his broker stated in the form that the purpose for which the car would be used was "private hire"; the broker meant thereby that private hire would be the principal risk. Resps. then issued to the claimant a policy which in words covered "private pleasure or private hire," but which provided that the signed proposal form was incorporated with it & formed the basis of the contract. Resps. made a claim against applt. for a certain sum as applt.' proportion of the difference between premiums received & losses paid in respect of policies issued pursuant to the contract. Applt. relied by way of defence to the claim upon the provisions of the Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), ss. 92, 93, & Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), ss. 22, 23, which require a contract of marine insurance to be expressed in a policy specifying the names of the underwriters. visions & the above enactments, was not an agency contract under which applt. were liable as principals to indemnify resps. for expenditure incurred by the latter as their agents, but it was a reinsurance contract, & applt., in the absence of a policy specifying their names as underwriters in accordance with the enactments, were not liable thereunder for the sum claimed.—*MOTOR UNION INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. Co. should be entitled to & accept a quota of a one-eighth of all risks accepted by the E. Co. through its marine department. The participation was fixed at 50 per cent. of the share retained by the E. Co. at its own risk of all marine assurances accepted on or after a specified date, with a maximum limit on any one ship. The liability of the two cos. was to commence automatically at the same time, the expressed intention being that the two cos. should participate pari passu in all marine insurances accepted by the E. Co. The N. Co. was to be entitled to a proportionate part of the net premiums & other benefits received by the E. Co., & was to bear its proportionate share of losses. The E. Co. was alone to settle all claims which might arise under its policies & the N. Co. was to be bound by the settlement. The E. Co. was to receive from the N. Co. commissions on the net premiums & on the profits derived by the N. Co. from the whole of the business under the agreement. By another clause in the agreement the N. Co. was absolutely bound in every case to follow the fortunes of the E. Co. No stamped policy of assurance was ever issued to the E. Co. by the N. Co. in respect of any risk coming within the agreement. The N. Co. having been ordered to be wound up by the ct., the E. Co. claimed to prove in respect of certain claims arising under the agreement. The liquidator disallowed the claim:—Held: the agreement was a contract for "sea insurance," & not being expressed in a duly stamped policy was invalid as not complying with the requirements of Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), & Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41).—*ENGLISH INSURANCE CO. v. The lien, therefore, of a broker in respect of a balance on an account under this sect. which is due to him from his employer, who, at the time when the policy was effected, he had no reason to believe was only an agent, does not revive if the broker, having parted with possession of the policy to his employer, knows or has reason to believe, when it comes again into his hands, that his employer was only an agent.—*NEAR EAST RELIEF v. - 491a. ———.]—A firm of merchants in Egypt, C. & V., took out with applts., the Atlantic Assurance Co., an unvalued policy of marine insurance to the extent of £8,000, to cover certain textile goods, which they held as security for a debt, on a voyage from Egypt to England. The insured goods were lost on the voyage. Resp. W. had been in litigation with C. & V. & had obtained a judgment against them in the Egyptian Cts., & in part satisfaction of his judgment, & in consideration of other matters, he took from the liquidator of C. & V. an assignment of their rights under the policy, subject to a stipulation that he should pay to the liquidator the first £1,000 recovered by him under the policy. W. then sued applts. on the policy, & judgment was given in his favour for £4,000. Applts. now appealed against this judgment, & resp. W. cross-appealed on the ground that the amount of the judgment should not have been limited to £4,000. The ct., after consideration, allowed the appeal & dismissed the cross-appeal:—Held: (1) per SCRUTTON, L.J., as the policy was an unvalued policy, it was essential that the value of the lost goods should be proved, and as the evidence was not sufficient to enable the ct. to fix any definite value the action failed; (2) per GREER & SLESSER, L.JJ., as the assignment to resp. W. did not pass to him the whole of the beneficial interest in the policy under Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 50, W. could not sue on the policy without joining his assignors, & as the action was brought in his name alone it must fail; (3) per cur., the expression "prime cost" in Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 16 (3), means the value to the owner at or about the date of shipment.—*WILLIAMS v. The policy further provided that the term "cargo" as used in the policy included (inter alia) "charges of said assured upon said cargo or any portion thereof." During the currency of the policy plffs.' steamship became a total loss with all her cargo, & plffs. lost their right to recover from the different consignees the freight which was in process of being earned by them at the time of the casualty. 711a. Statement as to guarantee of policy—Estoppel.—A series of marine reinsurance policies were issued by the National Marine Insurance Co. to appcts., upon each of which a claim for loss or damages arose. At the top of each policy was printed in red ink the following indorsement: "The due fulfillment of the liabilities arising under this policy is guaranteed by the National Benefit Assurance Co., Ltd., established in 1890 & with assets exceeding £1,500,000."

The two cos., which were in liquidation, were closely associated, & shared the same chairman, managing director & underwriter, & the same offices & clerical staff. There was no evidence of any formal contract of guarantee of the policies between the two companies, & on this ground the liquidator of the National Benefit Co. rejected appcts.' proof:—Held: the co., on the evidence, was estopped from denying that the policies issued by the National Marine Co. bearing the above indorsement were so guaranteed, & the appcts. were therefore entitled to prove in the winding-up of the co.—Re NATIONAL BENEFIT ASSURANCE CO., LTD., [1932] 2 Ch. 184; 101 L. 720a. — — — — —.]—Pltfs. insured a consignment of gunpowder on a voyage & reinsured with defts. Both the original policy & the reinsurance policies covered perils of the sea & jettison, & were expressed to be "warranted free from loss arising from . . . destruction . . . in a port of distress or otherwise." The original policy contained no admission of seaworthiness, but the reinsurance policies did contain such an admission, & they provided that defts. would "pay as paid thereon," & that the payment should be subject to the same terms as in the original policy. The vessel carried, in addition to the gunpowder, drums of sulphuric acid, & owing to heavy weather some of the drums burst & the acid disabled the machinery, with the result that the ship had to put in to a port of distress. There the required repairs could not be carried out with the gunpowder on board, & it was thrown overboard & became a total loss. Pltfs. paid the owners as for a total loss, & claimed to be reimbursed by defts.:—Held: as the way in which the sulphuric acid was stowed & loaded affected the safety of the ship & rendered her unseaworthy, pltfs. were under no liability on the original policy, & they could not recover from defts. on the reinsurance policies.—*FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE CO. v. 720b. "On a voyage."—Pltfs. insured a consignment of oranges from any port in Spain to Antwerp, & after the ship had left Valencia & had been in wireless communication with Gibraltar, they reinsured with deft. by a slip, which referred to the fact that the ship had been in such communication with Gibraltar & which contained the words "on a voyage," meaning, according to the evidence, that the risk should attach only from a named port in the course of the voyage. The ship stranded before she reached Gibraltar, the oranges were damaged, & pltfs. had to pay on the policy. In an action on the contract of reinsurance:—Held: on the true reading of the slip, the intention was to limit the risk to the voyage from Gibraltar, & the action failed.—*EAGLE, STAR & BRITISH DOMINIONS INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. 720c. Insured object in damaged condition at expiration of insurance—Continuation of risk for "immediate consequences" of such damage.]—Pltfs., reinsurers of a risk under a marine policy, reinsured that risk with defts. The policies were subject to the following conditions: "In the event of the vessel not being at the place of destination on the date of the expiration of the policy, the insurance shall continue in force till the end of the day when the vessel arrives at her first place of destination;" & "If the insured object is in a damaged condition at the time when the insurance expires, the risk shall continue for the immediate consequences of such damage until the object without unnecessary delay has been repaired or sold." On the date of the expiration of the policy, the vessel had not arrived at L. Bay, her first place of destination, but before reaching it she grounded on a reef & was taken into L. Bay badly damaged. Temporary repairs having been effected, she continued her voyage, but as she began to leak again she had to be run ashore in order to prevent sinking, & was subsequently sold as a wreck. Pltfs. having paid the original insurers as for a total loss, claimed against defts. on their reinsurance policy:—Held: the loss was an immediate consequence of the damage done by the original stranding, & the risk covered by the policy continued, until the vessel was repaired with no unnecessary delay, for the immediate consequences of the original damage.—*MERCHANTS' MARINE INSURANCE CO. v. 729a. Insurance against total or constructive or arranged total loss.—Meaning of “arranged” —Artificial total loss not included.]—The owners of a Norwegian steamship were insured with pltfs. & other underwriters. Pltfs. re-insured their risk with defts. The insured steamship stranded in the Black Sea but was floated off & eventually reached Constantinople. Owing to the absence of adequate repairing facilities at this port, it was extremely doubtful that the vessel's condition would permit her to reach a port where repairs could be carried out without the risk of her becoming a total loss. In these circumstances the owners & underwriters agreed to settle the matter: the vessel was to be regarded as a total loss & the underwriters were to pay an agreed sum which in fact was more than her full repaired value at the time. Pltfs. claimed a proportionate part of the sum so paid from defts. The material portion of the policy of re-insurance was as follows: “Insurance . . . upon hull & machinery, etc., valued as in original policy. Being against total & (or) constructive & (or) arranged total loss of vessel only as per Bergens Damp Club policies & to follow their settlements”:—Held: the action failed. On the true construction of the contract there must be either a constructive total loss or a genuine claim for one which claim is settled by arrangement. The word “arranged” really meant compromised & did not cover an artificial total loss created by the will of the parties.—*BERGENS DAMPSKIBS ASSURANCE FORENING v. - 729b. “Compromised &/or arranged total loss” —What amounts to.]—Pltf. & other underwriters insured the owners of a steamship against a number of risks, including total or constructive total loss. Pltf. then reinsured part of his risk with deft., the reinsurance policy providing (inter alia), that the reinsurer would pay only in the event of total constructive compromised &/or arranged total loss. During the currency of the insurance the steamer stranded & the owners claimed for a constructive total loss. After negotiation, pltf. & his co-underwriters settled the claim of the owners by paying in full for a constructive total loss & by paying a further sum, which was less than the amount claimed, in respect of expenses incurred by the owners under the sue & labour clause. Pltf. now sought to recover from deft. under the reinsurance policy. Deft. denied that a constructive total loss had in fact occurred, & he also denied that the settlement made by pltf. with the owners was a “compromised &/or arranged total loss” within the meaning of those words in the reinsurance policy. It was agreed that the question whether there had in fact been a constructive total loss should not be dealt with until a decision of the ct. had been obtained on the meaning of the words “compromised &/or arranged”:—Held: per SCRUTTON, L.J., as the total sum claimed by the shipowners had not been paid, but their claim as a whole had been compromised by payment of a sum smaller than the total claimed, the claim as a whole & each separate item of it had been “compromised” within the meaning of the reinsurance policy although one item had in fact been paid in full; per LAWRENCE & GREER, L.JJ., whether there had or had not been a compromise of the shipowners' claim for constructive total loss that claim had been discussed & the payment of it had been “arranged” within the meaning of the policy.—*GURNEY v. 733a. —Reinsurer not liable for costs of defending action brought by insured.]—Pltfs., an insurance co. carrying on business in Latvia, insured certain buildings at Riga against damage by fire. The buildings were the property of a co., called in this case the P. co., which was in liquidation, & the insurance covered only the buildings themselves & not their contents. Pltfs. reinsured part of their risk in England with a group of Lloyd's underwriters represented by one H., & part with another group represented by one C. During the currency of the policy a fire occurred on the insured premises, & the P. co. made a claim under their policy with pltfs. Pltfs. resisted the claim, but finally settled it by payment of an agreed sum. Pltfs. then claimed to be indemnified under their policies of reinsurance, & as these reinsurers refused to pay pltfs. brought these actions to recover the sums due from the two groups of underwriters respectively. The two actions were tried together. The ground upon which payment by the reinsurers was refused was that they had been induced to grant the reinsurance by a statement that the insured buildings were warehouses which were & would continue to be empty, whereas in fact they were being used for the storage of flax, which was a highly inflammable substance:—Held: (1) whatever might be the general rights of insured persons as to a cause of action arising as soon as the subject matter of the insurance is affected by a peril insured against, in this particular policy the undertaking of deft. was to follow the settlements of pltf.s., & deft. was therefore under no liability until the pltf.s. had effected a settlement, & the correct rate of exchange was that existing at the date of the settlement; (2) in the absence of express provision to the contrary in the policy of reinsurance the insurer could not recover from the reinsurer the costs & expenses of resisting a claim by the assured.—*VERSICHERUNGS UND TRANSPORT A. 735a. Unsuccessful action against insurer—Failure to pay costs—Liability of reinsurer to insurer. —By a policy of marine insurance a vessel was insured by her owner with the present pltf., who by another policy reinsured the vessel against the risks, & for the period, covered by the original policy, for total loss only. A claim by the owner against the present pltf.s. on the original policy failed on the ground that the vessel had been scuttled; & the present pltf.s. obtained a judgment against the owner for costs, but it was impossible to recover the costs. The present pltf.s. then claimed these costs from the present deft., one of the underwriters of the reinsurance policy. There was in the reinsurance policy a sue & labour clause, but no express contract by the reinsurers to pay the costs in question:—Held: that the sue & labour clause was inapplicable to such a claim, & as there was neither an express nor an implied contract to pay the costs in question the action failed.—*SCOTTISH METROPOLITAN ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. #### Landing dispensed with by owner.]

Pltf.s., a firm of merchants at O., imported a cargo of bunker coal from the Tyne, having insured the risk of the ocean transit with the P. co. until the goods were "discharged & safely landed," including "all risks of craft to & from vessel & whilst in craft awaiting landing." The storage risk, while at moorings at O., was covered by defts. Pltf.s.' practice was to have bunker coal discharged into barges & to leave it in the barges until a vessel required bunkers & then to supply that vessel from a barge alongside. When the coal in question had arrived at O. & 1,000 tons of it had been discharged into a barge, the barge sank during the following night & part of the coal was lost & part was damaged. Pltf.s. having claimed from defts., the latter compromised the claim & took third-party proceedings to recover a contribution from the P. co. on the ground of double insurance:—Held: as pltf.s. dispensed with landing the P. co.'s risk terminated when the discharge was completed, & as the discharge of the 1,000 tons had been completed, the proceedings against the third party failed.—LINDSAY BLEE DEPOTS, LTD. v. MOTOR UNION INSURANCE CO., LTD. (1930), 46 T. L. R. 572.

855a. Effect of clause.—Claimants insured with defts. a quantity of cork from a port or place between Bordeaux & Nice to the United Kingdom. Claimants were cork growers & had a factory & warehouse near Algeciras, & they had sent from the factory to Algeciras quantities of cork for shipment, & had allowed it to accumulate on the jetty there until there should be enough for a cargo. While a quantity of cork was on the jetty awaiting shipment & before the policy was issued, a fire broke out on the jetty, & to prevent the fire spreading, the authorities jettisoned part of the cork & threw sea-water on the remainder, with the result that a large portion of the cork was lost or damaged. The policy, when issued, contained (inter alia) a marginal clause that the policy was not to enure to the benefit of any fire insurance co., but loss reasonably attributable to fire was covered. It also contained a warehouse to warehouse clause. A claim under the policy was referred to arbn., & the arbitrator treated the marginal clause as non-existent, on the ground that it was not included, or stipulated for, in the slip which represented the true contract between the parties, & he also found that the loss was one reasonably attributable to fire:—Held: (1) the goods on the pier at Algeiras, having come in the ordinary course of transit from the shippers' manufactory at San Roque, were covered by the policy; (2) there being an existing fire & an imminent peril, the damage caused by water, used either to extinguish the fire or to prevent it from spreading, was a proximate consequence of fire, which could be recovered under the general words of the policy, as being ejusdem generis with fire; (3) the underwriters were not relieved from liability by the restraint of princes clause; (4) the case must be remitted to the arbitrator upon the question whether the policy issued, so far as it contained the fire policy clause, was or was not contrary to the usual form of marine insurance on goods.—SYMINGTON & Co. v. UNION INSURANCE SOCIETY OF CANTON (1928), 97 L. J. K. B. 646; 139 L. T. 386; 44 T. L. R. 635; 18 Asp. M. L. C. 19; 34 Com. Cas. 23, C. A.

912a. Vessel laid up—Continuation of voyage.—Deft. corp. insured pl'tfs.' steamship P. for twelve calendar months from midnight July 30, 1930, to midnight, July 30, 1931, subject to "Institute Time Clauses as attached." Clause 13 of the Institute Time Clauses provided "warranted free from particular average under 3 per cent." Clause 16 provided: "The warranty & conditions as to average under 3 per cent. to be applicable to each voyage as if separately insured, & a voyage shall be deemed to commence at one of the following periods to be selected by the assured when making up the claim, namely, at any time at which the vessel (1) begins to load cargo, or (2) sails in ballast to a loading port. Such voyage shall be deemed to continue during the ensuing period until either she has made one outward & one homeward passage (including an intermediate ballast passage if made) or has carried & discharged two cargoes, whichever may first happen, & further, in either case, until she begins to load a subsequent cargo or sails in ballast for a loading port." The P. was chartered to load in the River Plate for Antwerp, & between Jan. 10, 1931, & the discharge of her cargo at Antwerp on Apr. 9, 1931, she sustained damage on three occasions. She then lay up at Antwerp till Aug. 27, 1931, owing to absence of freight. During the period of lying up she sustained damage on two occasions. The question for decision was whether the cost of repairs arising from these two later casualties could be added to the expenses incurred on the three earlier casualties so as to ascertain whether the 3 per cent. particular average was exceeded:—Held: on the clear wording of clause 16, which defined a "voyage," the voyage which had commenced on Jan. 10 was still continuing during the period of lying up. On any other construction there would be great difficulty in knowing what limit to put on the period of delay. The contention of pl'tfs. was right, & there must be judgment for them.—PORTVALE STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CORPN. (1932), 147 L. T. 217; 48 T. L. R. 441; 76 Sol. - 1660a. —J.—A sailing ship, of which pltf. was mtgee., was insured by a policy, underwritten by deft., against perils of the sea & fire, & as per Institute Time Clauses, clause 8, against loss of the vessel "caused through the negligence of master, mariners, engineers or pilots." The vessel was damaged by ice & she leaked badly, & the captain, expecting a gale in which he thought she would be lost, decided to abandon her, & he set fire to her to prevent her from being a danger to navigation, & he & the crew then abandoned her. In an action by the mtgee. on the policy deft. did not allege any misconduct by the assured, by the mtgee., or by the managing owner, & there was no evidence that the abandonment was a wilful casting away of the ship by the master:—Held: on the facts the abandonment was unreasonable on the part of the master & constituted negligence, & this negligence, resulting in the continuing action of a previously existing peril of the sea, was covered by clause 8, & even apart from that clause, as the peril of the sea had endangered the ship & the negligence of the master resulted in proper measures not being taken to save her, pltf. was entitled to recover under Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 55 (2) (a).—*LIND v. The ship, having stranded, bumped on the rocks & damaged her bottom plates:—Held: the contact with the rocks was a "collision with an object" within the policy.—MANCOMU-

1708b. Collision with foreign pilot-boat—Payment of indemnity.—Pltfs., the owners of the T., sued defts. as one of the underwriters of a Lloyd's policy of marine insurance for the due proportion of a sum which they had had to pay in consequence of legal proceedings in France. In those proceedings pltfs. were sued by the pilotage authority of Dunkirk for damage done to a pilot-boat engaged by the T. in consequence of a collision between the two vessels, which it was agreed was in no way due to any negligence on the part of the T. Pltfs. counterclaimed in those proceedings for damage done to the T., but this counterclaim was dismissed. The evidence of French lawyers showed that the claim of the pilotage authority was in the nature of an indemnity, & could be answered only by showing gross negligence on the part of the pilot-boat, & the claim was not, therefore, of a delictual or quasi-delictual character. The collision clause of the policy provided that the insurers should pay three-fourths of any sum paid by way of damages in respect of a collision:—Held: the sum paid in consequence of the action in the French cts. was not paid by way of damages, & therefore was not recoverable under the policy.—*HALL BROS. 1740a. — Revolutionary committee.—Pltfs. were, under a contract with the Spanish Govt. for the authorities at Valencia, engaged in carrying out certain works in the harbour there. For this purpose, they had there certain vessels & their appurtenances which were insured with defts. The Govt. of Valencia after July, 1936, when the revolution in Spain commenced, passed, for practical purposes, into the hands of the Popular Executive Committee. The workmen employed upon the works in the harbour feared that the property & the business of pltfs.

would be confiscated by the Popular Executive Committee, & determined to take them over themselves. The representative of pltfs. at Valencia resisted this till resistance was no longer possible, when he was forced either to make his way to France or be killed by the workmen. Pltfs. then claimed for a total loss, & notice of abandonment was tendered but refused. It was found as a fact that the workmen had the support of the Popular Executive Committee, who were, at the material time, both the de facto & the de jure govt. of Valencia:—Held: this was a seizure by peoples & a loss by restraint of peoples, & therefore a constructive total loss, since recovery within a reasonable time was unlikely.—*SOCIÉTÉ BELGE DES BETONS SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME v. 1830a. Breakage of shafts.—A time policy of marine insurance, by which a steamship belonging to pltfs. was insured by defts. & others, contained a clause known as the "Inchmaree" clause in the following terms: "This insurance also specially to cover (subject to free of average warranty) loss of or damage to hull or machinery directly caused by accidents in loading, discharging, or handling cargo, or in bunkering or in taking in fuel, or caused through the negligence of master, mariners, engineers or pilots, or through explosions, bursting of boilers, breakage of shafts, or through any latent defect in the machinery or hull." During the currency of the policy the steamship was in dry dock undergoing an operation which required the removal of the propeller & tail shaft. While the propeller was being wedged off, the shaft broke owing to a latent defect therein, the end of the shaft with the propeller attached to it falling into the dock & a blade of the propeller being broken. Defts. admitted liability for the damage to the propeller. Pltfs. brought an action against defts., their claim being that defts. were liable under the above clause in the policy to the extent of their proportion in respect of the damage to & cost of repairing the shaft:—Held: pltfs.' claim failed in view of the following considerations, namely: (a) the words "breakage of shafts" in the clause could not be transferred from their context to a position immediately before the words in brackets, so as to read "This insurance also specially to cover breakage of shafts," inasmuch as such a construction would do undue violence to the clause; (b) the clause on its true construction meant that the insurance covered loss of or damage to hull or machinery occasioned by any of a number of occurrences which were arranged in groups, each group beginning with the expression "caused by" or "caused through"; the only two of these occurrences appropriate to the present case being "breakage of shafts" & "latent defect"; (c) though the shaft was part of the machinery, the damage involved in the breakage of the shaft was not damage to hull or machinery "caused through" breakage of the shaft, inasmuch as that expression could only refer to damage to some other part of the hull or machinery occasioned by the breakage of the shaft, & could not refer to damage involved in the breakage of the shaft itself; (c) for a similar reason, the damage involved in the breakage of the shaft through a latent defect therein was not damage to hull or machinery "caused through" that latent defect.—*SCINDIA STEAMSHIPS (LONDON), LTD. v. 1865a. Claims for damage caused "in relation to the removal of the wreck."—Pltfs.' steamer ran ashore & became a wreck within the jurisdiction of a harbour authority which had statutory power to remove at the owners' expense anything that might be an obstruction or danger to navigation. Pltfs. entered into a contract with a Danish firm under which that firm was to remove the wreck to the satisfaction of the harbour authority & to indemnify pltfs. in respect of claims made against them by reason of anything done or omitted to be done "in relation to the removal of the wreck." Pltfs. & the Danish firm then jointly took out a policy of marine insurance which was to cover the Danish firm's liability to pltfs. under the contract to remove the wreck, & to indemnify pltfs. against any claims made by the harbour authority, or any other parties, by reason of anything done or omitted to be done by the Danish firm "in relation to the removal of the wreck." In the result the Danish firm did not carry out their contract, & the harbour authority partly removed the wreck & charged pltfs. with the cost of doing so & the cost of buoying & lighting it before such partial removal & with a further sum for the future cost of buoying & lighting the remains of it. In an action by the ship-owners on the policy:—Held: the words "in relation to the removal of the wreck" were of general application & were not limited to something which arose during the actual removal, the Danish firm's failure to carry out their contract was covered by the policy, & therefore pltfs. were entitled to recover under it.—OCEANIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. v. EVANS (1934), 51 T. L. R. 67; 78 Sol. Jo. 838; 40 Com. Cas. 108, C. A.

pltfs. were members, & as such entitled to be indemnified against liabilities for cargo's proportion of general average not otherwise recoverable. Pltfs. claimed under the policies. The London Assurance denied liability. The third defts. admitted liability if & when any balance was ascertained. The other insurers disputed the amount claimed & the method of computation. The bills of lading provided that general average should be adjusted under York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, & under the policies the same rules were to apply:—Held: the 18,000 dollars recovered in New York must be taken into account when computing the liability of the disbursements underwriters. In the case of the hull underwriters the values to be considered were those at the termination of the adventure & the loss incurred by reason of the diminution or extinction of the value of the cargo was a loss which fell upon the assured, the shipowner, & came within Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 66 (4). —*GREEN STAR SHIPPING CO., LTD. v. During the currency of the policy the steamer collided with another steamer. The ship was repaired at pltfs.' cost, & a collision action by pltfs. against the owners of the other steamer was settled, & the owners of the other steamer paid over to pltfs. £2,500, as being half the damages. In an action against defts. pltfs. contended that, as the balance of their loss was £2,500 they were entitled to recover that amount, it being less than the value of £4,000 put on the steamer in the policy:—Held: defts. were liable only for £1,500, being the difference between £4,000 & £2,500, the amount recovered by pltfs. from the owners of the other ship.—*GOOLE & HULL STEAM TOWING CO., LTD. v. ment. Salvors employed by resps. raised the tug in a few days, & the abandonment was not accepted. The salvors, without the knowledge of applts., made an offer to resps. for the tug, & resps. requested them to put it into writing, which they did. The appellate ct., considering the evidence as to the probable cost of repair, held that there had been only a partial loss to an amount less than that paid into ct.:—Held: (1) the sinking was not an actual total loss; (2) resps. were not precluded from denying that they had accepted the abandonment; (3) there had been no constructive total loss within Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 60 (2) (i), since even at the date of the abandonment it was not unlikely that the tug could be recovered, & it was unnecessary to consider whether the old rule, that the crucial moment was the commencement of the action, had been modified by sects. 61 & 62; (4) the appellate ct. was not bound to accept the highest estimate of the cost of repairs given by resps.' witnesses, & the ct.'s finding as to the sum necessary, being justified by the evidence & not being based upon any error of principle, could not be questioned.—CAPTAIN J. 2086a. ———.]—(1) Pltfs. took out a policy with defts. in respect of the freight on the carriage of a grain cargo from the West Coast of South America to United Kingdom ports. The vessel loaded her cargo & started on her voyage in Dec. 1933, but shortly afterwards went ashore in the Straits of Magellan. She was later taken off by a salvage co. on the terms that they should be paid £11,000 in the event of success. The hull underwriters & pltfs. agreed to abandon the voyage on a payment by the underwriters, & the ship was abandoned to the salvors. The cargo owners were notified that the adventure was at an end & their underwriters paid as on a total loss. On a claim by pltfs. under the freight policy it appeared that the cost of temporary repairs to the vessel, sufficient to carry her to her destination, would exceed her repaired value:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover as for a total loss of chartered freight on the ground (per SLESSER & GREEN, L.J.J.) that it was shown that the cost of temporary repairs would exceed the repaired value of the vessel; on the ground (per SCOTT, L.J.) that there was an actual commercial loss of the vessel within the meaning of the charter-party, or, alternatively, on the ground that in the circumstances known at the time to pltfs., their decision to treat it as an actual loss was justified under the charterparty contract & under the policy.

Per SCOTT, L.J.: Under a contract of affreightment transhipment is a privilege or liberty of the shipowner, & not a duty. An insurance policy on chartered freight is concerned only with the named ship, the insurance being against inability to carry the cargo to its destination in that ship.

(2) Held: further, pltfs. were entitled to interest at 4 per cent. on the amount recovered as from Mar. 1, 1934.—KULUKUNDIS v. NORWICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE SOCIETY, [1937] 1 K. 2093a. Ship stranded.]—Under a charterparty dated Sept. 16, 1930, pltfs.' steamship was to proceed to Valparaiso to load cargo. The charterparty contained the usual exceptions including perils of the sea & the cancelling date was specified as Nov. 20, 1930. Pltfs. took out a policy for £4,000 part of £9,000 on freight &/or chartered freight &/or anticipated freight. The policy was subject to the Institute Voyage Clauses—Freight, which provide by clause 4: "In the event of the total loss, whether absolute or constructive, of the vessel, the amounts underwritten by this policy shall be paid in full, whether the vessel be fully or only partly loaded or in ballast, chartered or unchartered"; & by clause 5: "In ascertaining whether the vessel is a constructive total loss the insured value in the policies on ship shall be taken as the repaired value..." On Nov. 13, 1930, the steamer, while proceeding to Valparaiso through the Straits of Magellan, stranded, & on Nov. 17, 1930, the vessel was abandoned to the hull underwriters. The steamer was eventually refloated & brought by salvors to Magallanes, & on June 17, 1931, while she still lay at Magallanes, the hull underwriters compromised for a total loss, the owners retaining the ship but remaining liable to the salvors. Eventually the ship was surrendered to the salvors in discharge of their claim, & it was sold by them & repaired in 1932. The actual value of the ship when repaired was £13,000, but the insured value under the policy on ship was £30,000. The cost of repairs exceeded £13,000, but was less than £30,000:—Held: as, owing to perils of the sea, the ship could not make the cancelling date or be tendered according to contract to the charterers at Valparaiso, there was an actual total loss of freight. But if there had not been an actual total loss, the test whether the freight insurers would be liable as on a total loss would be analogous to that applicable to a ship policy in determining whether there had been a constructive total loss of ship. At the same time the expression 'constructive total loss" has no application to a freight policy & clause 5 of the Institute Voyage Clauses—Freight was therefore inapplicable in determining whether there was a total loss of freight, because the damage resulting to the ship from a peril of the sea could not be repaired except at a cost which the shipowners could not reasonably be required to incur.—*CARRAS v. 2213a. —.—Pltfs. insured a cargo of timber on a voyage from a Baltic port to Garston by a policy dated Oct. 29, 1914, which was subscribed by deft. & was against war risk only as excluded by the f. c. & s. clause, including risk of mines, torpedoes & bombs, but excluding all claims arising from delay. The vessel started on Nov. 22, 1914, & on Nov. 23 Germany declared that wood was contraband. On Nov. 25 a German torpedo-boat stopped the vessel when outside the Falsterbo lightship, & the officer informed the master that no ships with contraband were allowed to pass the Sound but he might go to a Swedish or Danish port in the Baltic, & the master thereupon went to Stephens Klint, a Danish port. On Dec. 3 notice of abandonment was given by pltfs. to deft. but he refused to accept it. On Dec. 11, the master left Stephens Klint & passed through the Sound, & having called at Elsinore & Christiansand for orders he proceeded in accordance with the orders to Grimstad in Norway, where he arrived on Dec. 15 & discharged his cargo. The Norwegian Govt. placed no obstacle in the way of the cargo being reshipped for England. In an action brought on the policy upon the ground that there has been a constructive total loss, there was evidence that up to & including Dec. 3 all ships which had sailed before Nov. 23 had an option to proceed to ports on the east coast of Sweden & there discharge, & that many such ships carrying wood had done so & their cargoes had been railed across Sweden & had reached England:—Held: on Dec. 3 the total loss of the venture was not unavoidable & pltfs. were not entitled to recover.—*WILSON BROS., BOBBIN CO., LTD. v. - 2261a. — Cost of repairs greater than insured value.]—Pltfs., who were the owners of a steamer, were by various policies dated Aug. 28, 1936, insured in respect of the hull & machinery of the steamer valued at £28,000 for twelve months from July 20, 1936. By a Lloyd's policy also dated Aug. 28, 1936, pltfs. were insured in respect of the steamer in the sum of £4,110 on freight chartered or otherwise for twelve months from July 20, 1936. The freight policy was subject to the Institute Time Clauses—Freight, which provided in clause 5 as follows: "In the event of the total loss, whether absolute or constructive, of the steamer, the amount underwritten by this policy shall be paid in full, whether the steamer be fully or only partly loaded or in ballast, chartered or unchartered." Pltfs. chartered the steamer to carry a cargo of oil from Venezuela to the United Kingdom at a certain freight. The steamer went to a port for repairs, & while there was on Oct. 31, 1936, badly damaged by an explosion followed by fire. The repairs were estimated to cost £37,400, but as the steamer when repaired would be worth £45,000 pltfs. did not abandon the steamer to the hull underwriters but repaired her at the estimated cost, & claimed as for a partial loss from the hull underwriters & were paid by them £27,000. The charter-party was not performed & pltfs. did not receive the freight payable thereunder. Pltfs. claimed £4,110 from the underwriters of the freight policy under clause 5 of the Institute Time Clauses attached to the freight policy, but the underwriters refused to pay & pltfs. brought an action to recover that amount:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover the amount insured by the freight policy from the freight underwriters, as there had been a constructive total loss of the steamer, inasmuch as the steamer had been so damaged by insured perils that pltfs. would be entitled on giving notice of abandonment to recover as for a constructive total loss from the hull underwriters; & it was not necessary that pltfs. should have actually given a notice of abandonment & have recovered as for a constructive total loss from the hull underwriters.—*PETROS M. The A. was sunk in a river & in fact was a constructive total loss. Notice of abandonment was given & acceptance thereof refused. Pltfs. & defts. agreed without prejudice to their rights to take joint action to save the property. The master of the A. employed a tug to watch the wreck & warn other vessels. Owing to the negligence of the crew of the tug the steamship S. came into collision with the A., & both vessels sustained damage. In an action brought, in the names of pltfs., by & for the benefit of defts., against the S., the owners of the S. counter-claimed & recovered judgment for the whole of their damages & costs, & the underwriters paid three-quarters of the damages & costs to the owners of the S.:—Held: the underwriters were jointly liable to indemnify pltfs. against the remaining one-quarter of the damages & costs of the S., the liability not arising under the policy but upon the contract of indemnity.—*SUART & STEAMSHIP ALLEGHANY OF LONDON, LTD. v. Reinsurance of liability for total loss—No reinsurance of running down clause—Application of principle of cross liabilities.]—Defts. underwrote a policy of marine insurance on the W. against total loss, & also by a running down clause, against three-fourths of collision liability on the principle of cross liabilities. Defts. reinsured their liability for total loss only with pltf. During the currency of the policy the W. was sunk as the result of a collision with the M. & became a total loss. In proceedings in the Admiralty Ct. both vessels were held equally to blame, & as the M.'s half damages exceeded the W.'s half damages, the W. had to pay the balance under the Admiralty rule of single liability. Defts. paid the owners of the W. for a total loss, & also a further sum under the running down clause, that sum being ascertained by bringing into account a payment treated as having been received in respect of the M.'s liability for the damage done by her to the W., & the payment of a larger sum in respect of the damage done by the W. to the M. Pltf. claimed that he was entitled to the benefit of the credit in respect of the M.'s liability:—Held: pltf., not being a reinsurer of the liability under the running down clause, was not entitled to the benefit of the credit mentioned.—*YOUNG v. 2380a. Ordinary policy—Excess value policy—No right of contribution.—The owners of a cargo of wheat insured it with the S. M. I. Co. for £885, which was then its full value. During the voyage the price of the wheat rose substantially, & the owners, without the knowledge of the S. M. I. Co., effected an increased value policy with underwriters for £215. The cargo subsequently became a total loss, its net sound value being £900. Both the co. & the underwriters paid the amounts of their respective policies in full, & received letters of subrogation from the cargo owners. Subsequently, as the result of general average adjustments, the owners received a sum of £532 4s. 8d. as salvage. The S. M. I. Co. claimed the whole of this sum; the underwriters claimed to be entitled to contribution in the proportion which their policy bore to the total value. On an interpleader to determine the respective rights of the co. & the underwriters, BRANSON, J. held that the underwriters were not entitled to contribution, but that the co. were entitled to receive the whole of the salvage. On appeal:—Held: the words "he [the insurer] is thereby subrogated to all the rights & remedies of the assured in & in respect to that subject-matter as from the time of the casualty causing the loss," in Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 79 (1), merely gave effect to the well-recognised law with regard to subrogation, the result of which was that it was an integral part of the primary policy that the S. M. I. Co. had a contingent right of subrogation which vested in them at the moment when the policy was effected; the contingency had occurred & the contingent right had become a vested right; therefore, the co. was entitled to the whole of the salvage.—*BOAG v. 2404a. Prosecution of claim—Condition limiting time for.—Pltfs. were interested in a certificate of insurance which was issued under two policies of marine insurance subscribed by defts. in respect of 100 barrels of pure gum turpentine shipped from Florida to Rotterdam. The policies provided for payment for "leakages from any cause in excess of 1 per cent. on each invoice." It was the practice of the trade, at the port of shipment, to gauge the barrels of turpentine & to express the result in gallons, & at the port of discharge to weigh it & to express the result in kilograms with an allowance for reduction on account of the varying temperature conditions of 3·25 kilograms to the gallon. The policies also contained a stipulation providing that no suit or action for the recovery of any claim should be maintainable in any ct. unless such suit or action be commenced within one year from the happening of the loss out of which the claim arose, but that limitation clause did not occur in the certificate. When the vessel was discharged a shortage in respect of the gallons of turpentine shipped was ascertained to have taken place. Defts. having refused to pay upon the ground that there was no sufficient evidence of the loss & that the claim was not instituted within the year, the present claim was brought by the pltfs. on the certificate:—Held: the limitation clause was not one which bound the certificate holder. The rights of the original policy holder, which were conveyed to the certificate holder, comprised the rights given by the policy qualified by all the conditions & warranties which affected the nature & extent of the insurance granted, but did not impose an obligation affecting only a limitation of time within which the rights so given were to be enforced; (2) an actual physical loss had been proved based upon the calculations, & there was no ground for imputing that loss to any cause other than leakages.—*PHOENIX INSURANCE CO. 2463a. ———.]—A ship belonging to the Glen Line was insured, hull, machinery, etc., with the Liverpool & London War Risks Insurance Assocn., against the usual war risks. On the declaration of war on Aug. 4, 1914, the ship was seized by the German Government & was interned until after the Armistice. The Glen Line gave notice of abandonment, which was accepted by the Assocn. as for a constructive total loss on Aug. 4, 1914. After the peace the Glen Line presented a claim to the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal, under article 297 (e) of the Treaty of Versailles, in effect, for compensation for loss of prospective profits arising from the seizure of the ship by the Germans immediately on the outbreak of the war, & this claim was compromised for about £140,000. Thereafter the British Government, as reinsurers to the extent of 80 per cent. of the war risks undertaken by the Assocn., who made no claim to the compensation, claimed that the compensation was received by the Glen Line as trustees for the Assocn., & that the British Government were entitled to 80 per cent. of the trust moneys:—Held: the compensation recovered under the treaty was analogous to damages recovered for loss of freight in prospect secured by an existing charter & must therefore be treated as belonging to the owner & not to the abandoner.—*GLEN LINE, LTD. v. Believing from information received in Sydney that the lemons had been damaged by a peril insured against & sold in consequence, the insurers paid the insured value to the insured, who signed a document by which they agreed to transfer & abandon to the insurers the goods & their proceeds. It was ascertained later that the lemons had not been so damaged, but had been sold because they were found to be ripening. By the Commonwealth Marine Insurance Act, 1909, s. 68 (6)—which is identical with Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 62 (6)—“Where notice of abandonment is accepted, the abandonment is irrevocable. The acceptance of the notice conclusively admits liability for the loss & the sufficiency of the notice”:—Held: the insurers could recover the sum paid by them as money paid under a mistake of fact; the document above mentioned, having regard to its terms & the fact that it was given after the lemons had been sold, was not a notice of abandonment within sect. 68 (6) of the Commonwealth Act.

Semble: notice of abandonment, or its acceptance, given under a material mistake of fact is a nullity.—NORWICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE SOCIETY, LTD. v. PRICE, LTD., [1934] A. C. 455; 103 L. J. P. C. 115; 151 L. T. 309; 50 T. L. R. 454; 78 Sol. Jo. 412; 40 Com. Cas. 132, P. C.

2527a. ———.]—Unstamped insurance.—In 1920 the E. co. & the Y. co. entered into a participation agreement effective as from Jan. 1, 1920, which was a reinsurance treaty binding the E. co. to cede & the Y. co. to accept a participation of all risks mentioned of the share retained by the E. co. accepted after Jan. 2, 1920. In Sept. 1921, the E. co. arranged that the N. co. should take over the Y. co.'s position as from Jan. 1, 1920; & in Jan. 1921, an agreement, hereinafter called “the Outwards Treaty,” on the same lines & with the same provisions as those of the agreement with the Y. co. was entered into between the E. co. & the N. co. In 1921 the N. co. & the E. co. entered into another participation agreement, hereinafter called “the Inwards Treaty,” the N. co. ceding & the E. co. accepting a share of all marine risks. The Inwards Treaty had no provisions for the issuing of policies, or for particulars sufficient to make possible the issuing of policies, to satisfy the provisions of Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), & Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41). No stamped policies were in fact issued under any of the three agreements, & no premiums were ever actually paid to the N. co., which was credited with the proper proportion of the net premiums received by the E. co. On the compulsory winding-up of the N. co. the E. co. claimed to be entitled to prove for sums paid by it for premiums under the Outwards Treaty, after allowing for sums paid or credited to it by the N. co. under the Inwards Treaty. The Official Receiver rejected the claim on the ground that both treaties were invalid & inadmissible in evidence, because they were contracts of marine insurance which did not comply with the requirements of Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), & Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), & were unlawful; & upon a summons asking for an order that the proof should be allowed:—Held: (1) as the Outwards Treaty was invalid & void, the entries of premiums to the credit of the E. co. were not evidence of payment, & therefore no claim under Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 84, could be made; (2) even if premiums had been paid such a claim could not have been made, as Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), ss. 92, 93, 97, amounted to an implied prohibition of offences by incurring liability for premiums in respect of unstamped sea insurances, & there had therefore been “illegality” on the part of the E. co. with the result that a claim for return of premiums under Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (c. 41), s. 84, must fail.—Re NATIONAL BENEFIT ASSURANCE CO., LTD., [1931] 1 Ch. 46; 100 L. The premium not being paid the officer produced a cancellation voucher which he had taken with him when he went to call on assured, & assured then signed the voucher & the policy was cancelled:—Held: the termination of the insurance of the unilateral act of the co., & the policy was cancelled within the meaning of the question in the proposal.—*BYRCE v. iii. — Use as "bunk house."—An action upon a policy of fire insurance was resisted by deft. co. on the ground that at the time of the fire the house was not occupied as a private dwelling, contrary to a condition in the policy. One pltf. G. let the house to H., who said he was going to live in it, & G. understood that H. would occupy it with his wife & family. At the time of the fire H. had three men living with him. Once a week H.'s wife came in to keep things in order, & twice a week the wife of one of the other men did the same. Each of them contributed to the rent, that is, the other men paid their shares to H. who paid G. G. was never in the house while it was so occupied:—Held: the house was occupied as a private dwelling.—GENDRON v. PROVIDENT ASSURANCE CO., [1931] 1 D. L. R. 418; 66 O. L. R. 147.—CAN.

iv. —.]—Pltf. was insured against loss by fire of furniture in a house "only while occupied as a dwelling."—Held: the words were used in the policy as part of the description of the property & not as a condition modifying the statutory conditions; a mere temporary vacancy or absence of the occupant reasonable in the circumstances will not be ground for a finding that the house was not "occupied as a dwelling."—*METCALFE v. i iv. —.]—In an action on fire insurance policies on a house "while occupied only as a private dwelling" it was found that the house was to the knowledge of the insured vacant & not occupied as a dwelling when one policy was forwarded to him, & held that, since when or soon after he applied for that policy he intended to leave the house unoccupied, it was his duty to notify the insurer of that intention in order to enable the latter to judge of the risk to be undertaken, & that since the insured did not give such notice he had misrepresented or omitted to communicate to the insurer a circumstance material to the risk & since the insurer's agent did not know the facts, that policy never was in force.—McGETTIGAN v. GUARDIAN ASSURANCE CO., LTD., [1936] 3 W. W. R. 345.—CAN.

v. — "Occupied."—By the terms of a policy, it covered the building insured "only while occupied, constructed & situated as described." A fire occurred while pltf. was not living in the building, though he had left some furniture & clothing there & no one else lived there:—Held: the property was not "occupied" within the meaning of the policy.—*LAMBERT v. sm. — "Communicating."—A policy of fire insurance was expressed to cover a certain brick building " & its additions, communicating & in contact therewith . . . only while occupied as a restaurant." The brick building ceased to be used as a restaurant during the term of the policy. In contact therewith, at the rear, was a one-storey frame building occupied as living quarters. There was a solid brick wall between the two buildings; to enter the residence from the restaurant it was necessary to go out of doors. The whole structure had been used as a unit in operating the restaurant. A fire destroyed the living quarters & damaged the restaurant:—Held: the living quarters were "additions communicating & in contact" with the restaurant.—*MILLER v. Instantly the vapour in the tank caught fire, an explosion occurred & the boat was in the midst of flames. Very substantial loss was sustained by appts., the owners of the tug, & they sued resps. upon a policy of fire insurance for the amount of their entire loss. Resps. contended that they were not liable for the loss attributable to explosion, but only for that part of the loss actually caused by fire. The policy contained the following printed clause: "Unless otherwise provided by agreement in writing added hereto this co. shall not be liable for loss or damage occurring . . . The intending assured, in a proposal for fire insurance in respect of their premises, in answer to the question: "Has this or any other insurance of yours been declined by any other co.?" answered "No." Thereupon a policy was issued. It subsequently appeared that some time before that proposal the assured had applied to another co. for a policy on motor-cars, but the application was declined on the grounds of misrepresentation & non-disclosure of certain facts:—Held: the non-disclosure of this refusal of the motor car insurance was the non-disclosure of a material fact in the proposal for the fire insurance which therefore entitled the fire insurance co. to avoid the policy.—LOCKER & WOOLF, LTD. v. During the term of a fire insurance policy on farm buildings, the insured, with his family, moved from the farm, & took up residence in a new home, intending to reside there permanently, to rent or sell the farm, which remained vacant. He gave no notice to the insurer of the vacancy. Within 30 days from the time the insured property became vacant, it was destroyed by fire.—Held: the insurer was liable on the policy. In view of statutory condition 5 (d) of Ontario Insurance Act, R. S. O., 1927, in the policy, vacancy for a period of 30 days was a risk contemplated by the policy & assumed by the insurer, & it was not open to the insurer to show that the mere fact of vacancy or non-occupancy for less than 30 days was a "change material to the risk" within statutory condition 7.—

1. The mere fact that a life insurance policy names a beneficiary, where at least the beneficiary is not within the class of "preferred beneficiaries," does not give him the beneficial interest in the insurance money.—CANADIAN CREDIT MEN'S TRUST ASSOCN., LTD. 5. Insurance for benefit of named wife & daughter—Death of wife—Second wife not designated.—L. was insured by the society for $2,000, payable to "my wife," naming her, "one-half," & the other half to his daughter. His named wife predeceased him, & he married again. His second wife & daughter both survived him. 6. *A husband effected a policy of assurance on his life under the provisions of the Life, Fire & Marine Insurance Act, 1902. The policy was expressed to be "for the absolute benefit of the wife of the assured in the event of the assured reaching the selected age of maturity of the policy during her lifetime, or should she become the assured's widow, failing which for such of the children of the assured as shall be alive when the policy moneys become payable." The wife divorced her husband, & he married again. The husband died. The only child was that of the first marriage :—Held : the policy moneys went to the child.—Re BEST (1936), 36 S. R. N. S. The policy was expressed to be "for the absolute benefit of the wife of the assured should she become the assured's widow, falling which for the absolute benefit of such of the children of the assured as shall survive the assured, & attain the age of twenty-one years." The wife died, & the husband married again. There were children only of the first marriage. The husband died:—Held: the policy moneys went to the children.—LODGE v. DOWIE (1936), 36 S. R. N. S. r i. — Subsequent bequest of policies in trust for wife & mother.—Testator obtained two policies of insurance upon his life & designated his wife as beneficiary in both policies. Subsequently, in his will, he directed that his policies should be held in trust for the use & benefit of his wife & mother upon the same trusts as if the proceeds had formed part of the residue of his estate:—Held: this altered the designation of the wife as preferred beneficiary to the limited extent of giving effect to the interest conferred on the mother by the will.—Re MACINNES, [1934] 3 D. Prior to the execution of his will testator took out a policy of life insurance on his own life & prior to the execution of the will this policy was made payable to M., testator's wife:—Held: above clause did not operate as a declaration in favour of the children of any part of the insurance moneys.—Re GRINDLAY, [1933] O. By his will he altered the shares of the three survivors, giving a portion to another child & portions to four grandchildren, & caused the policies to be cancelled & re-issued payable to "his exors. in trust," & died in 1894, while R. S. O. 1887, c. 136, was in force:—Held: the apportionments to the four children were valid, but those to the grandchildren, while valid as legacies, were invalid as against creditors.—*McINTYRE v. sx. — Declaration for purpose of defeating creditors.—An action brought by a creditor of an insured after his death for a declaration that the designation by the insured of his wife as a preferred beneficiary was fraudulent & void, as having been made with intent to defeat creditors, was dismissed on the ground that the money became the property of the wife absolutely & therefore, his creditors were not prejudiced.—ROYAL BANK v. DUMART, [1932] 3 D. L. R. 430; O. R. 661.—CAN.

sy. Whether declaration applicable to new policy.—Defn., the widow, contended that the insurance proceeds were subject to a trust in favour of herself & children because of a declaration made by the insured in purported compliance with Life Insurance Act. The policy in question was one which the insured had taken out in exchange for two policies then held by him. It was made payable to his exors., administrators & assigns. The declaration relied on was made in a testamentary document dated about a year previously, & it, the declaration, enumerated (inter alia) one of said two then existing policies. This will was found to be invalid because the witnesses had not signed in the presence of each other and probate was granted of an earlier will. The widow contended that the declaration applied to the new policy. When applying for the new policy the insured had signed documents relating to the then existing policies, in which he certified that they were "not now assigned." The application for the new policy was made subsequently to the letter of Jan. 14, in which the insured confirmed on behalf of himself & his wife the understanding that a life insurance policy was to be deposited as security for the performance of the lease. The policy was not, however, then deposited. The policy so deposited was the new policy. The widow's claim was not upheld.—PORTAGE AVENUE DEVELOPMENT CO., LTD. v. DIAMOND, [1932] 3 W. W. sd. Declaration—What amounts to—Statement in holograph will.—An insured, his wife & infant son died of asphyxiation in the same disaster. He left a paper which, prior to this motion, had been granted probate as a holograph will. In it he directed payment of certain bills, & under the total thereof wrote "Insurance 2,961.00," & after directing that not more than $786 be spent "on our burial" added "paying 1,000 to mother." Under sect. 151 of Manitoba Insurance Act, 1932, the insured's wife was presumed to have died before him, the result being, his father having predeceased him & the deceased infant being his only child, that his mother was the only member of the class of preferred beneficiaries who survived him:—Held: the writing was a "declaration" within the said Act, & by it the mother was made a preferred beneficiary for $1,000, but as to the amount which was listed among the bills to be paid as payable to her she should be treated merely as an ordinary creditor.—Re RICHARDSON'S ESTATE, [1936] 3 W. a i. — Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.—R. applied for insurance under Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, & printed on the form provided for the application for insurance were certain instructions, one reading: "Give full statement of illness or injury of a serious nature, etc." In his written application, in answer to the question "Are you in good health?" he answered "Yes," & the question "If not, what is the nature of your illness or injury?" he left unanswered. The policy issued on this application. R. at the time of applying was & had been for some time, to his knowledge, afflicted with a chronic valvular disease be avoided if any statement in the proposal was untrue. The policy provided that it should be avoided by any "fraudulent or untrue" statement on the subject of the insurance, & that it should be subject to the rules of the society. These rules stated that the policy would be avoided if there were any fraudulent statement as to the health of the person whose life was insured. The claimant's father had heart disease, but the claimant, being unaware of this, stated in good faith on the proposal form that his father's health was sound. On the father's death resps. refused to pay the sum due on the policy. The claimant contended that, as the rules avoided the policy for fraud & did not avoid it for an innocent untruth, the latter had no effect:—Held: the claimant's misstatement was a warranty, that the word "untrue" in the policy included innocent misstatements, & the rules were not inconsistent with the other provisions of the contract, & therefore resps. were not liable on the policy.—*HOLMES v. of the heart, from which he later died. His widow now sues to recover the amount of the policy.—Held: (1) as the very basis of the contract of insurance was the information conveyed in the application therefor, R.'s concealment of the truth regarding his condition constituted in law a fraudulent misrepresentation which voided the policy; (2) the fact that R.'s heart condition was revealed in an application for pension, or in the report of a vocational officer, did not constitute a communication as to his condition to health or life insurance officers of the Dept. of Govt., charged with the administration of the Act here in question, & could not here be introduced as constituting an answer to the questions above mentioned.—ROACH v. c 1. — Of surrender value—By agent.]—The life of S. was insured by a twenty-year endowment policy which provided that at the end of the term he could exercise one of three options, including that of surrender of the policy on receipt of a sum to be ascertained in a specified manner. About ten months before the policy expired he wrote to the co. asking for the amount payable on surrender, which was promptly furnished, & more than a year later, he brought action for a larger cash payment & in the alternative for rescission of contract for insurance & return of the premium paid with interest alleging that when he applied for the insurance he was informed by the agent of the co. that the cash value of the policies surrendered would be the larger amount claimed.—Held: as S. did not swear nor the evidence he adduced establish that he was induced to enter into the contract by the representations of the agent that the sum payable on surrender & it might be ascertained that had he been given the true figures he would still have taken the policy, his action must fail.—*SHAW v. 2906 1. Material alteration in health.—A., after making a proposal for a policy of life insurance & undergoing, on Mar. 8, a medical examination, consulted a doctor the next day, & on his advice was, on Mar. 16, operated upon for hydrocele. On Mar. 15 the premium had been paid & a provisional this declaration : " It is hereby declared that the above particulars are true, & it is agreed that this proposal & declaration shall be the basis of the contract of assurance." On July 15 defts. replied stating " The proposal made by you . . . has this day been accepted & if the health of the life proposed remains meanwhile unaffected, the policy will be issued on payment of the first premium. . . . The risk of the co. will not commence until receipt of the first premium, & the directors meanwhile reserve the power to alter or withdraw this acceptance." On July 21 L. began to feel ill, & on the next day a friend filled in a cheque for the first premium, which L. signed in bed. The cheque was not sent off till the evening of July 24, by which time L. was seriously ill with pneumonia. On July 26 defts. received the cheque, & thereupon they sent to L. a certificate of that date stating that the proposal had been accepted, & that upon the payment of the first quarterly premium a policy would be issued in due course. On July 27 L. died. His administrators sued defts. for the sum insured :—Held : (1) the acceptance of the proposal by defts. was made in reliance upon the continued truth of the representations therein, & as the risk had been materially increased between proposal & acceptance, a condition which defts. had made a condition going to the root of the contract had not been fulfilled ; (2) since contracts of insurance were contracts uberrimæ fidei, there was a duty of disclosure on the part of the assured to inform defts. of his change of health, which was a material change in the risk insured, & the position was here even stronger because defts. had inserted express terms in their documents to protect themselves.—*LOOKER v. expressed to be payable provided the insurance co. received the premiums on the dates specified, & it was provided that 30 days of grace were allowed for the payment of premiums. The policy was taken out as security for a loan, the mtge. providing that if the assured should at any time make default in payment of any of the premiums it should be lawful for the claimant to pay the same. On Apr. 9, 1936, the claimant, being aware of the assured's financial difficulties, called on the insurance co.'s district manager & offered to pay the premium for Mar. 15, 1936. The district manager declined this offer & said he was arranging for a cheque to be paid by the assured in a few days. On Apr. 17, 1936, the district manager received a cheque signed by the assured & post-dated to Apr. 23, 1936. The district manager in the premium account described this premium as outstanding. He did not state that the policy had lapsed. On Apr. 20, 1936, the assured died. The claimant claimed the policy moneys, but the insurance co. repudiated the policy on the ground that it had lapsed, owing to non-payment of the premium due on Mar. 15, 1936:—Held: (1) the insurance co. could not, in the circumstances, be heard to say that the premium due on Mar. 15, 1936, had not been tendered to it by the claimant on Apr. 9; (2) although it might not have been within the scope of the district manager's authority to waive the condition requiring payment of the premium on Mar. 15, 1936, or within 30 days thereafter, the insurance co. ought not, after the refusal of the premium, to be allowed to raise that question.—*FARQUHARSON v. In June, 1927, insured was killed as a result of making an aeronautic flight while engaged in the performance of his duty as an officer in the Permanent Active Air Force of Canada.—Held: after reviewing the statutes in force at the time the policy was issued, which statutes remained unaltered throughout the life of the contract, & also the King's Regulations & Orders for the Royal Canadian Air Force, effective Apr. 1, 1924, the insured was not in the service of the Militia; & even if it could be said that he was in the service of the Militia, he was not "in the active service" of it.—*TORONTO GENERAL TRUST CORPN. v. If there are any special forms to fill up, kindly forward them to me." At the request of the co. A. forwarded his policy, & it was there-after returned to him with a receipt for the surrender value indorsed on it for his signature. A. did not return the policy, & in consequence the surrender value was not paid to him. On Feb. 13, 1907, A. intimated a claim under the policy. Act, R. S. C., 1927, to execute assignments of the policies to the bank & the bank was entitled thereunder to exercise any rights which the co. possessed in respect of the policies.

The policies provided that the "owner" might elect to surrender them for their cash values:—Held: in view of the use of the words "owner" & "insured" throughout the policies, the word "owner" in the provision for surrender referred to the "insured"; & in the absence of proof of an agreement that said co. was to have all the insured's rights under the policies, neither it nor its assignee the bank had the right to surrender the policies & receive the cash surrender value thereof.—*BANQUE CANADIENNE NATIONALE v. The father died on July 25, 1925, having up to that time paid all the premiums accruing due upon the policy. The son attained twenty-one years of age on Sept. 26, 1916. After the death of the father, all premiums were paid either by the son or upon his behalf. The son died on June 2, 1936, & it was held that the policy moneys belonged to the estate of the father. In 1932, the son became of unsound mind, & an order was made by the master in lunacy ordering the premiums due on the policy to be paid by the receiver of the son's estate, the order also stating that the policy was part of the absolute property of the son. It was found as a fact that all parties concerned acted at all times under the mistaken belief that the policy belonged to the son, & the payment of premiums by the son & by the receiver was made on that basis :—Held : the personal representative of the son was entitled to a charge on the policy moneys for the premiums paid by him or on his behalf.—*Re FOSTER, HUDSON v. Each policy provided for payment of the sum assured to the exors. or administrators of the assured & then contained the following proviso: "Provided always that the production of a receipt for the sum payable hereunder signed by any person being either an exor. or administrator or the husband or wife or a relation by blood or connection by marriage of the assured shall be a discharge to the co. for the same & shall be final & conclusive evidence to all intents & purposes that such sum has been duly paid to & received by the person or persons lawfully & rightfully entitled to the same & that all claims & demands whatsoever against the co. in respect of this policy have been fully satisfied." The assured died on May 6, 1932, having by her will left all her property, which included the policy moneys, to her child B. O'R. After the death of the assured, D. R., a niece of the assured, claimed payment by the co. of the policy moneys &, on production by her of the policies & a letter signed by deceased assured stating that she was insured in the co. for about £50 & expressing her wishes that after payment of her debts her clothes & remaining money should go to her said niece, the co. on May 20, 1932, in ignorance of the will & in good faith paid to Miss R. the moneys due on the policies & took from her a receipt which was expressed to be in full discharge of all her claims under the policies. On Sept. 22, 1933, letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to Mrs. O'R., & in the capacity of administratrix of the assured she claimed against the co. to be paid the moneys due under the policies less a sum expended on the assured's funeral expenses:—Held: (1) the proviso was not repugnant to the covenant to pay to the exors. or administrators of the assured but formed an integral part of the contract & qualified the covenant; (2) the exclusive right of the administratrix to receive & give a discharge for the policy moneys was subject to the terms of the contract entered into by the assured; (3) the receipt from Miss R. therefore operated as a valid discharge to the assurance co., with the result that the administratrix's claim failed.

The policy was consequent on a proposal form in which there was a statement: "State (a) the purposes (in full) for which the vehicle will be used; & (b) the nature of the goods to be carried." The answer was "(a) Delivery of coal; (b) coal"; & there followed a declaration that the questions were truthfully answered & that the insured agreed that the declaration & answers should be the basis of the contract. By the recital to the policy it was agreed that the proposal & declaration should be of a promissory nature & effect & should be the basis of the contract. Condition 6 of the policy provided that it was a condition precedent to any liability of the insurers that the conditions & endorsements of the policy so far as they related to anything to be done or complied with by the insured should be faithfully observed & that the statements made & answers given in the proposal were true, correct & complete. The insured were described in the sched. to the policy as coal merchants, & under the heading: "Endorsements & Use Clauses" were the words: "Transportation of own goods in connection with insured's own business within stated." A collision occurred between the motor lorry insured & a motor car, resulting in damage covered by the risks insured against under the policy. Resps. had occasionally used the motor lorry for carrying timber, & on the day of the accident a journey had been made carrying timber, but in fact on the journey when the accident happened coal only was being carried.—Held: there had been no breach of a condition on which the policy was issued as the words used did not mean that the use of the motor vehicle was to be exclusively confined to that of carrying coal & that any temporary & incidental use for carrying goods other than coal would completely defeat the policy. To state in full the purposes for which the motor vehicle was to be used was not the same thing as to state in full the purposes for which the vehicle would be exclusively used.—*PROVINCIAL INSURANCE CO. v. st. Estoppel.—In an action on an accident insurance policy deft. denied liability on the ground that the policy had lapsed automatically because of non-payment of the premium within the period of grace & continued inoperative until reinstated by payment of the premium which was not paid until after the accident occurred, & that the policy as reinstated was subject to statutory condition 22 that a reinstated policy covered only injuries sustained after the reinstatement:—Held: deft. was estopped by its course of conduct over a number of years in repeatedly accepting payment of premiums from pltf. after expiration of the period of grace & in paying previous claims under similar circumstances without ever having raised the question of lapse or reinstatement. The forwarding to pltf. of the form of "intermediate statement of claimant" amounted to a negotiation as to settlement, or to an invitation to negotiate, & was a further fact estopping deft.—*BRUNK v. While a person who was insured under the policy was driving in a buggy after sunset without any light on the buggy, contrary to sect. 18 (1) of Police Offences Act, 1928, he was run into by a motorist & so injured that he shortly afterwards died:—Held: at the time when the insured received the injuries he was performing an unlawful act within above condition & the word "while" therein having a temporal & not a causal connotation he was not protected by the policy.—*ABEALOM v. This policy covers the assured & the assured's wife against personal accidents occurring to themselves while riding in, mounting, or dismounting from, any motor car to the following extent, & subject to the limits as set forth:—(a) Death.—The underwriters will pay to the assured's execs., administrators or assigns the sum of £1,000 in the event of death." The deceased & his wife were both killed in a collision between the assured's motor car & a train:—Held: the risks assured against were the death of the assured & his wife, but that the policy was limited in amount to one sum of £1,000.—*RE CAIRE, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. sy. Defence to claim by insured—Breach of law.—An insured under an accident insurance policy accidentally discharged a shot-gun into his foot with the result that the foot had to be amputated. To an action on the policy the insurers set up the defence that the accident occurred while the insured was breaking the law by hunting & shooting ducks out of season in violation of Migratory Birds Convention Act (Dom.) & Game Act, 1924 (Sask.), & by carrying a loaded shot-gun in an automobile contrary to the latter Act:—Held: while the insured may have hunted ducks during the day of the accident, he was not in the act of doing so when he shot himself, the hunting being then over & abandoned; the evidence was insufficient to justify a finding that the gun was being carried loaded in the automobile.—*WESTERN FINANCE CORPN., LTD. v. sz. Death due to "disablement" of car—Death by drowning.—A policy of accident insurance covered death "sustained by the wrecking or disablement of any privately owned automobile . . . in which the insured is riding or driving, or is accidentally thrown from within such wrecked or disabled automobile." A clause of the general conditions provided that the insurance did not cover "injuries fatal or unfatal of which there shall be no visible marks or contusion on the exterior of the body at the place of injury." A motor car which the insured was driving had been brought across a river on a ferry, & when the insured, who had taken his seat in it, started it in order to drive off the ferry it backed off the ferry into the water. The assured & the other occupants were able to climb on to the roof of the car, but the car, after drifting some distance, went to the bottom & the insured was drowned. There was no evidence of the cause of the backing of the car. The judge dismissed the action, holding that the insured's death was not due to the wrecking or disablement of the car but to drowning. On appeal:—Held: the appeal should be allowed.—NEWCOM v. HOME ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA (Alta.), [1930] 1 D. L. R. 121; [1929] 3 W. W. R. 590.—CAN.

sr. Permanent disability.—In view of the provisions of the accident & sickness insurance policy herein requiring the insured to furnish on demand proof of the continuance of his disability, although proof of this disability had been previously accepted by the insurer:—Held: the word "permanent" in the phrase "total & permanent disability" was not intended to be given full effect.

The insured, a trainman, was suffering from tuberculosis. The medical testimony was that his disability prevented him from performing the work on which he had been formerly employed & rendered him unfit for any but certain very light work:—Held: the fact that the insured could earn a living if he could obtain an improbable position involving the doing of practically no work should not exclude him from the benefit of the policy.—LANG v. METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE CO., [1937] 2 W. W. R. 453.—CAN.

st. "Insured or his wife"—Insured married woman.—Resp. was insured with applt. under a comprehensive automobile policy one of the terms of which provided that if "the insured or his wife" should, in circumstances defined, sustain any bodily injury applt. would pay to the "insured or to his legal personal representatives" the compensation specified, which in the case of death was $1,000. The insured was a married woman, which fact was known to applt. at the time when the policy was issued. During the currency of the policy an accident occurred, in circumstances which were within the definition in the policy, in which the husband of the insured was killed. The insured claimed for the death of her husband under the above clause:—Held: the words "the insured or his wife" in the clause in the policy did not include the case of an "insured or her husband," & therefore the insured was not entitled to recover under the terms of the policy for the death of her husband.—*AUTOMOBILE FIRE & GENERAL INSURANCE CO. sz. Use of car for "private purposes."—The insured was insured against the risk of accidental death while travelling in a motor vehicle which did not belong to him & which was being used for "private purposes." "Private purposes" were defined as including social, domestic, & pleasure purposes & use by the insured in person in connection with his business. The insured was a dealer in sheep, travelling in a motor vehicle that did not belong to him to attend a stock sale. At the time of the accident causing his death, at the request of the person controlling the vehicle, he was driving the car. The vehicle was in control of the agent of a co. (the owners), & was driven to a town where a stock sale was to be held. The agent, his wife, & child, the insured, & another sheep dealer C. were all in the car. C. intended to buy sheep at the sale & the agent undertook the journey in the course of his duty, but would not have undertaken it if C. had not gone; the insured had no definite intention of purchasing sheep; the agent's wife & child took the journey as a pleasure trip:—Held: the car was being used for "private purposes" within the meaning of the definition of those words in the policy, & the insurer was liable

3180a. Concussion.]—A policy of insurance was expressed to be payable on the death of the insured occurring "as the result solely of bodily injury caused by violent, accidental, external & visible means sustained by the insured whilst riding in, mounting into or dismounting from, the insured car." The insured, a strong vigorous woman of about thirty-one years of age, & a motorist for many years, one evening left Bristol alone in her car to drive to Nailsworth, a distance of some 40 miles. The next morning the car was found badly damaged & lying on its side on a track some yards below the level of the road. A very wavy track, which had been forced through bushes near the car, finally led to a river, & there the insured was found standing almost upright with the water a few inches over her head. There was a strong overhanging branch quite close to her, by which she could have pulled herself out of the water. A post-mortem examination showed that During a family dispute pltf. was threatening his brother with an iron bar, when he was designedly shot in the leg by his father, & as the result of the injury his foot had to be amputated. The father was convicted of unlawfully wounding.—Held: the injury was accidental within the policy, but that it was the result of a provoked assault, & pltf.'s claim therefore failed.—*GRANT v. The policy provided that "the insurance given by this policy is against loss of life . . . resulting from personal bodily injury . . . which is effected solely & independently of all other causes by the happening of a purely accidental event." The beneficiary sued to recover the amount payable for loss of life.—Held: the claim was covered by the terms of the policy since there was no doubt that the injury, i.e. the broken leg, without which death would not have ensued when it did was caused, by nothing but the accident.—*CASEY v. The blister became infected & the infection caused the insured's death. EWING, J., held that the death so caused came within the terms of the policy. He made a claim against applt. under a policy of insurance which covered losses sustained by "bodily injury caused solely & directly by accidental violent external & visible means." On appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Ct. allowing resp.'s claim.—Held: resp. not having given evidence pointing to any involuntary, unforeseen, or unexpected movement, the evidence did not warrant a conclusion that the sg. sl. Slip on ice.]—An accident insurance policy insured pltf. against loss "resulting from bodily injuries effected directly & independently of all other causes through external violent & accidental means." The insured while engaged in a curling bonspiel slipped, but did not fall, on the ice when he suddenly began to sweep. His heart was to his knowledge slightly affected & he had been advised by his doctor not to do any vigorous sweeping if he took part in curling. A few days later he was found to be suffering from acute dilatation of the heart & he had to remain in bed almost continuously for three months. The trial judge's finding, on evidence which on the appeal was held to justify it, was that pltf.'s disability was due to (a) the exhaustion from the three days of curling, (b) the accidental slip on the ice, & (c) the sweeping which followed the slip. He gave judgment for pltf. On appeal.—Held: even leaving (a) out of consideration, it being (semble) a condition other than a cause, there were two contributing co-ordinate & practically contemporaneous factors the combination of which constituted the proximate cause of the injury & since one of them, the sweeping, was not accidental, it followed that the injury was not effected independently of all other causes by the accidental means, i.e., the slipping on the ice, & therefore, was not within the terms of the policy.—*HARMON v. The action was based upon a provision in the policy insuring pltf. against legal liability for bodily injuries sustained by any one in respect of the operation of his car. The defence relied upon pltf.'s failure to give written notice to the co. in the manner required by the policy. Pltf. had notified deft. co.'s agent on the day following the accident by exhibiting to him the letter from the injured party's solr. threatening action unless the compensation claimed was paid. Evidence was given to show that on previous occasions verbal notice was given to the agent, & notices so given were recognised & acted upon by payment of claims:—Held: the agent was authorised to act for the co. notwithstanding the provision in the policy requiring the insured promptly to give written notice to the co.; verbal notices given were sufficient within the meaning of the contract & the defence of absence of written notice failed.—*DUNPHY v. sz. Failure to pay supplementary premium. —Appl. co. insured D. under an indemnity policy against liabilities resulting from Workmen's Compensation Act for a period of one year from Jan. 26, 1924. The premium was based upon the whole remuneration of the insured's employees during the period of the policy as follows: a "minimum" premium & an "estimated premium" were stipulated to be paid, & were in fact paid, in advance by the employer, & at the expiry of the policy, an adjustment was to be made so that a supplementary premium may then be due by the insured or a reimbursement may be made by the co., according to the amount of wages paid by the insured during the life of the policy; but, in any case, the "minimum" premium was to be retained by the co. On Aug. 2, 1924, an employee of D., L., was injured, but a petition to sue the employer under the Act was served on Jan. 28, 1925, & on the same day, D. made an assignment in bkpy. L. having been granted permission to sue the trustee, one G., obtained judgment for $5,300 & costs against the

"which during the continuance of this policy shall be . . . contracted by any workman while in the employers' direct employ." In 1928 one H., who had been employed as a file cutter for many years, entered the employment of applt. in that capacity, & he continued at that work till June 16, 1930, when he was put on different work. On June 16, 1930, the policy lapsed. In 1931 H. left applt.' employment & became unemployed. In 1932 he was certified as totally disabled by silicosis & tuberculosis, & the total disablement was certified as having begun on July 18, 1932. H. claimed compensation under the Silicosis Scheme, & applt. paid him compensation. In an arbn. between applt. & resp. insurance co. the arbitrator found that H. had contracted the disease before the lapse of the policy but that it was a gradual process & it was impossible to fix a date at which it began, & that it was contributed to by his employment with the applt. though it was impossible to say that it began after H. entered their service. It appeared that after the issue of the policy applt. sent to resps. a letter stating that the policy would protect them against claims in respect of silicosis:—Held: on a case stated, whether on the true construction of the policy the disease had or had not been "contracted" while the policy was in existence, applt. must, in view of their letter, be held to be liable on the policy. —SMITH (R.) & SON v. An appearance without protest was entered in the action on behalf of deft., & as the Peruvian Minister forbade deft. to raise the plea of diplomatic immunity, no such plea was inserted in the defence. The jury found a verdict for pltf. for damages, & the insurance co. repudiated liability on the ground that deft. had broken the conditions of the policy by insisting that the plea of diplomatic immunity should not be raised:—Held: the privilege of diplomatic immunity was waived by the entry of appearance without protest, & as deft. was bound to obey the direction of his Minister there was no breach of the conditions of the policy, & deft. was entitled to the indemnity claimed.—*DICKINSON v. 3202b. — Condition against liability if vehicle unroadworthy—Vehicle must be unroadworthy at commencement of journey.—

By a policy of motor car insurance defts. agreed to indemnify the assured against third party risks, "liability in respect of any accident while driving the car in an unsafe or unroadworthy condition" being excluded:—Held: applying the principle of marine insurance that there is an implied warranty that a ship is seaworthy at the time of sailing but no warranty that she shall continue seaworthy throughout the voyage, the policy must be taken to mean that, for the assured to be covered by it, the car must be roadworthy when it set out on its journey but need not continue to be roadworthy throughout the journey. An assignee of the assured was, therefore, entitled to recover in an action against defts. on the policy where defts. (on whom lay the onus of proving unroadworthiness) failed to prove that the car was unroadworthy when it began its journey & only showed that, by reason of a defective brake, it was unroadworthy at the time of the accident.—*BARRETT v. present resp. who had succeeded G. as trustee. On Jan. 27, 1925, one day after the expiry of the policy & one day prior to the service of the petition on D., an adjustment had been made as provided for in the policy & a supplementary premium of $1,020.58 was thereby shown to be due by D. On Jan. 22, 1927, resp. sued applt. co. for the payment of $6,490, being L.'s claim of $5,300 & the costs, under the judgment secured against resp. which he had not yet paid. Applt. co. repudiated its liability on the ground that the supplementary premium of $1,020.58 had not been paid by the insured:—Held: applt. co. was liable for the amount claimed by the resp.

Under the terms of the policy, the obligations of each party were not simultaneous & that of the insurer to indemnify was not made subject to the obligation of the insured to pay the supplementary premium. Applt.'s liability was complete & absolute on the date of the accident, i.e. Aug. 2, 1924; on that day, applt., having received all the premiums then due, became bound to pay to the employer the amount of the indemnity to be awarded to the injured employee under the Workmen's Compensation Act.—*EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSURANCE CO. v. motor car & was killed. At & about the time of the accident the lights of his motor car were not shining. On a claim under the policy by the insured's daughter as assignee of the rights under the policy from the legal personal representative of the insured:—Held: (1) at the time of the accident the motor car driven by the insured was in a damaged or unsafe condition within the exceptions clause, & the insurance co. was accordingly relieved from liability under the policy irrespective of whether or not the insured was aware at the time of the accident of the damaged or unsafe condition of the car. The terms of the exceptions clause were unambiguous & plain, & there was no justification for supplementing them by adding "to the knowledge of the driver," or for reforming the contract into which the insured had entered; (2) the position of a motor car on land cannot be assimilated to that of a ship at sea & the same code of law rigidly applied to both cases so as to make the exceptions clause to the policy only applicable where the motor vehicle was in a damaged or unsafe condition at the beginning of its journey. Such an argument based on the identity of the conditions which govern the seaworthiness of a ship at sea & the road-worthiness of a motor car on land is unsound. —*TRICKETT v. The policy of insurance contained a condition "the insured shall take reasonable precautions to prevent accidents." Pltf. proceeded to demolish the mill, & in the course of such demolition used explosives. Three persons were killed by falling masonry & upon a claim being made under the policy, the insurance co. repudiated liability:—Held: (1) the denial of the use of explosives amounted to a warranty that they would not be used; (2) even if it amounted to a mere description of the risk to be insured, the cause or contributing cause of the accident was the use of explosive; (3) there had been a change

by a colliery co. While he was in receipt of weekly compensation the colliery co. went into voluntary liquidation. The colliery co. was a contributing member of a mutual indemnity co. which kept a register of protected mines. There was no policy of insurance, but the terms of the insurance were to be found in the Memorandum & Arts. of Assocn. of the indemnity co. which contained the following clause: "As to non-fatal accidents the indemnity shall only cover payments applicable to the period of membership of any member ceasing to be a member, & such member shall discharge his own liabilities from the date when he ceases to be a member." Shortly before going into liquidation the colliery co. lost possession of its mines, which were thereupon removed from the register of protected mines kept by the indemnity co. By the Arts. of Assocn. of the indemnity co. the colliery co. ceased to be a member six weeks after it had lost protection for its mines. The indemnity co. continued to pay compensation to the workman for a period sufficient to cover the six weeks & then denied liability for any further period. The workman claimed compensation from the indemnity co. & the colliery co. in the alternative. The county ct. judge dismissed the application as against the indemnity co. but made an award for the workman against the colliery co. The workman appealed:—Held: the workman had no greater rights against the indemnity co. than the colliery co. had, & when the colliery co. had ceased to be a member of the indemnity co. the indemnity co. was no longer liable to indemnify the colliery co. for any weekly payments made in respect of a non-fatal accident & could not therefore be made liable for any further payments to the workman.—*VICKERS v. 3214a. —. —.]—A policy of insurance provided that the insurance co. would indemnify the assured against all sums which he might be legally liable to pay for damages or compensation to any person for accidental bodily injury or accidental damage to property where such injury or damage was caused by the driving of the insured's motor car, including law costs when incurred with the consent of the co. While the insured was driving his motor car a collision took place between it & a motor cycle, the result being that the driver of the latter vehicle was injured, a passenger thereon was killed, & both vehicles were damaged. At the time of the collision the insured was drunk through his own unpremeditated folly. The insured was convicted of the manslaughter of the deceased passenger. The injured driver brought an action for personal injuries against the insured, in which he was awarded damages & costs, & the insured incurred costs. The insured also incurred costs in repairing the vehicles, in attending an inquest on deceased, & in defending himself in the police ct. proceedings before his trial. In an action by the insured against the co. for indemnity against these damages & costs:—Held: (1) the policy covered liabilities of the insured for accidental bodily injury to any person or accidental damage to property caused by his negligence, even though gross & attended by criminal consequences; (2) the policy, by covering these liabilities, was not void as against public policy, & the insured was entitled to the indemnity which he claimed.—JAMES v. BRITISH GENERAL INSURANCE CO., [1927] 2 K. B. 311; 96 L. J. K. B. 729; 137 L. T. 156; 43 T. L. R. 354; 71 Sol. Jo. 273.

L., G.'s brother-in-law, took out with the G. co. a similar policy, providing that "insured will also be indemnified hereunder while personally driving a car not belonging to him provided that there is no other insurance in respect of such other car whereby insured may be indemnified," & that "if at the time of the occurrence of any accident, loss or damage there shall be any other indemnity or insurance subsisting whether effected by insured or by any other person the corp'n. shall not be liable to pay or contribute more than a ratable proportion of any sums payable in respect of such accident loss or damage." While L. was driving G.'s car with G.'s consent it had a collision, & L. had to pay damages. #### PART V. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 4.

32171. Motor driven by relation of assured—With assured's authority.—An accident occurred while a motor car was being driven by C., a duly licensed driver. The car belonged to C.'s wife & was being operated with her permission. Judgment was recovered by the injured party against C., but was unsatisfied:—Held: C. was "a person insured against liability for injury or damage to persons or property of others within Ontario Insurance Act, —.]—A motor-car accident policy issued by resp. co. to J. extended the insurance to a relative driving the car, provided that the latter was not entitled to indemnity for the same risk under another policy. L., a relative of J., while driving the car, injured a third party, who claimed damages. L. was himself insured with the O. insurance co. against claims for injuries caused by him while driving a car not belonging to him, provided that he was not entitled to an indemnity in respect thereof from another co. Resps. denied liability on the ground of the proviso in their policy exempting them where the claimant was entitled to indemnity under another policy:—Held: on the proper construction of the policies, the insurance clause in each policy expressed to be cancelled by the co-existence of a similar clause in the other policy should be excluded from the category of co-existing cover, & that therefore resps., not being protected by their proviso, were liable.—*WEDDELL v. 3217c. Action by repairer against insurers for repairs—Right of insurers to be subrogated to owner's rights against repairer.]—In an action by the repairer of a motor car against an insurance co. for repairs executed at their request, the co. contended that they were entitled to set-off, on the principle of subrogation, the claims of the assured, the owner of the car, against the repairer, who had been driving the car on the occasion of a collision. The insurance co. had commenced an action, in the name of the owner, against the repairer for the damage done to the car by his negligent driving, but, at the date of the commencement of the action by the repairer, certain claims of the assured under the policy in regard to third party risks, etc., were still unsettled:—Held: the fact that these claims were then unsettled prevented the insurance co. from being subrogated to the owner's rights against the repairer, & the co. were not entitled to rely on these as a set-off to the repairer's claim.—PAGE v. SCOTTISH INSURANCE CORPN., FORSTER v. PAGE (1929), 98 L. J. K. B. 308; 140 L. T. 571; 45 T. L. R. 250; 73 Sol. Jo. 157; 34 Com. Cas. 236, C. A.

3217d. Condition as to efficient condition of vehicle.]—The claimants were the holders of a policy by which resp. co. had undertaken liability for damage caused by or to a motor car. The policy contained a condition that "the insured shall take all reasonable steps to maintain such vehicle in efficient condition." & it provided that the observation of the conditions should be a condition precedent to the liability of the co. The claimants removed the foot-brake from the vehicle, leaving only a hand-brake, & in this state of affairs the vehicle caused damage, 1927, s. 85 (1), & pl'ts. were entitled to recover from the insurance co. the amount of the unsatisfied judgment obtained against C.—SCHOENFELD v. PILOT AUTOMOBILE & ACCIDENT INSURANCE CO., [1930] 2 D. L. R. 1; 65 O. L. R. 29.—CAN.

& was itself damaged, in an accident, but the exact cause of the accident could not be ascertained:—Held: the condition was a condition precedent, & as it had been broken the co. was not liable on the policy.—JONES & JAMES v. PROVINCIAL INSURANCE CO., LTD. (1929), 46 T. L. R. 71.

3217e. Policy covering any car used "instead of the insured car"—Insured car sold—Whether new car covered.]—Defts. contracted by a policy of insurance to indemnify pltf. against "all sums which the assured shall become legally liable to pay as compensation for . . . bodily injury . . . caused to any person or persons by a motor car described in the schedule hereto." The car was thereafter referred to as the "insured car." The policy further provided that "this insurance shall cover the legal liability as aforesaid of the assured in respect of the use by the assured of any motor car (other than a hired car) provided that such car is at the time of the accident being used instead of the insured car." Pltf. exchanged the insured car for a new car of a similar type. While pltf. was using the new car an accident occurred, causing injury to a third person, & pltf. referred the claim to defts., who repudiated liability on the grounds that pltf. was not using the new car "instead of" the old one & that when the insured car was sold the insurance ceased. In an action for a declaration that defts. were liable to indemnify pltf. against the claim:—Held: the policy necessarily implied that the insured car should be the subject-matter of the insurance at the time of the accident, & therefore the action failed.—ROGERSON v. SCOTTISH AUTOMOBILE & GENERAL INSURANCE CO., LTD. (1931), 146 L. T. 26; 48 T. L. R. 17; 75 Sol. Jo. 724; 37 Com. Cas. 23, H. L.

3217f. Effect of non-disclosure—Previous theft of car.]—Pltf. insured a motor car against loss, the policy providing that the proposal should be incorporated in the contract. The proposal, which was signed by pltf., concluded with the declaration: "I hereby declare that the above motor car is my own sole property & that all the particulars stated above are true, & that no facts have been omitted or any information withheld with which the underwriters should be acquainted. I further agree that this declaration shall be the basis of the contract between us." 3217g i. Compulsory third party insurance—What may be recovered—Wages & expenses of additional assistance awarded to injured party.]—In an action arising out of a motor collision special damages were awarded to pltf. in respect of wages paid by him for additional assistance & also in respect of moneys paid by him for the board & lodging of the persons giving such assistance:—Held: the damages were within the indemnity under the contract of insurance created by sect. 6 of the Motor Vehicles Insurance (Third Party Risks) Act, 1928.—SOUTH BRITISH INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. FEELY & SOTEROS, [1932] N. Z. L. R. 1392; G. L. R. 680.—N.Z.

3217g ii. — Liability to employer of injured party for loss of services.]—Pltf., while negligently driving his wife's car with her authority collided with a car belonging to the T. M. Co. in which one C. was a passenger. The T. M. Co. sued pltf. for damages, including a claim for damages for the loss of C.'s services. The car driven by pltf. was insured with deft. co. both under Motor-vehicles (Third-party Risk) Act, 1928, & under comprehensive policy covering third-party risk. Delt. co. accepted liability to indemnify pltf. in respect of the whole claim by the T. M. Co. save only the claim for the loss of C.'s services:—Held: (1) the statutory right to indemnify from liability to pay damages on account of "death or bodily injury of any person" did not include an indemnity from liability to pay damages to an employer of a person injured for loss of the services of such person; (2) the provisions of the policy as to third-party property risks indemnifying against "liability at law for damage to property (including animals) other than property of the assured or in his custody or control" related only to tangible property & did not create a right of indemnity in respect of liability to the employer of a person injured for loss of his services.—*JOYES v. 3217g iv. — "Plying for hire"—What amounts to.]—The first deft., the owner, owned a motor car. The second deft., the driver, agreed to carry Mr. & Mrs. A. from the Lower Hutt to Auckland & back, together with Mrs. A.'s mother on the return journey, for a sum no more than sufficient to pay for the benzine & oil used on the journey. The driver agreed to carry pltf. who had heard of the proposed journey, & her daughter to Hamilton for £1. The owner knew of this arrangement, & lent the car to the driver for the purpose of the journey. The relation between the owner & the driver was that of bailor & bailee. There was no evidence (a) that the bailment had been for a period of fourteen days or more, or (b) that the car ever plied for hire or was ever used in the course of the business of carrying passengers for hire, except the evidence as to the occasion on which the accident occurred. Pltf. was injured through the driver's negligence, & judgment had been given against him. In dismissing the claim against the owner & the third deft., the statutory indemnifier of the owner.—Held: (1) the vehicle was not a vehicle "plying for hire" within sect. 6 (4) (c) of Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928; that term implying some measure of solicitation or holding out to the public or a section of the public to use the vehicle; (2) the vehicle was not being "used in the course of the business of carrying passengers for hire" within sect. 6 (4) (c) of Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928, the transaction being an isolated one; (3) the extension of liability under sect. 3 (1) of the Act is expressed to be "for the purpose of this Act, & of every contract of insurance there-

Observed, that 1934 Act, s. 10 (1), was intended to apply only to cases where, although ex facie of the policy liability in respect of third-party risks bore to be covered, the insurer might be entitled to avoid or cancel the policy on such grounds as the non-disclosure of some material fact or a representation of fact which was false in some material particular.—*ROBB v. 3217j. Policy covering "personal luggage"—Meaning of.]—The words "personal luggage" in a policy of insurance in respect of a private motor car are not necessarily confined to the meaning given to them in cases relating to railway carrying rates or to liability to customs duties. In railway cases the words may have a narrower sense than they have in a policy of insurance against the risks of travel by motor car. By a policy of insurance on a motor car, an insurance society undertook to indemnify the insured against liability in respect of accidental injury to any person, subject to exceptions (inter alia) (a) while the car was "being used for other than private pleasure," or (b) while it was "conveying goods other than personal luggage." The insured accidentally ran over & killed a man while he was driving the car at a time when there were fastened on the top of the car two laths with which the insured proposed to repair some trellis work in his garden:—Held: the word "pleasure" in the policy was used in contradistinction to "business," meaning of sect. 6 (1) of Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928.—COMMERCIAL UNION INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. COLONIAL CARRYING CO. OF NEW ZEALAND, LTD., [1937] N. Z. L. R. 1041; 13 N. Z. L. J. 320.—N.Z.

r i. — Notice — Sufficiency of.]—Where notice by an insured under a policy of automobile insurance that a claim for damages had been made upon it was given, through its solrs., to the insurer's agents five days after the insured received the claim:—Held: the notice had been given "promptly" within the meaning of statutory condition 8, sched. D, & the notice in question was one of the accident as well as of the claim, & if not perfect, was imperfect so that sect. 258, empowering the ct. to relieve from the forfeiture or avoidance of a policy where there has been "imperfect compliance" as to anything to be done by the insured, was applicable.—*NORTH LETHBRIDGE GARAGE, LTD. v. r ii. — Receipt by insurance adjusters.]—Insurance adjusters employed by agents of an insurance co. to adjust only a particular case of loss resulting from damage to an automobile held not to be agents of the co. who could bind it by the receipt of the notice, called for by statutory condition 8 (1), sect. 154 of Insurance Act, 1925 (c. 20), of a claim made against the insured on account of the accident; but an oral notice subsequently given to the agents was held sufficient to justify the ct. under sect. 12 of Automobile Insurance Policy Act, R. S. B. C., 1924, from relieving against the forfeiture of the policy on that ground; moreover the co. was held to be estopped by the acts of its agents from raising the lack of notice as a defence.—*MARSH v. "If the insured shall . . . die solely as the direct result of the actual physical injuries received in the accident. . . . Provided that . . . no compensation shall be payable . . . when death . . . is due to a disease which is the direct or indirect result of the injuries received in the accident." The insured, falling out of a motor-vehicle on to a road, sustained an abrasion, & an infection of tetanus (from which she died) occurred when she was injured:—Held: the insured's death was due to a disease which was the direct or indirect result of the injuries received in the accident.—VICTORIA INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. HARRISON-WILKIE, [1938] N. Z. L. R. 375.—N.Z.

3217k. Policy taken out by firm—Admission of new partner.—(1) Where a policy against third-party claims arising out of the use of a motor vehicle has been taken out by a firm, the subsequent admission of a new partner to the firm, without the consent of the insurer, does not relieve the insurer from indemnifying from liability those who were partners of the firm at the time the policy was effected, provided that such a partner claiming indemnity retains his undivided interest in the insured vehicle.

Per GODDARD, J.: Such a policy is not forfeited should one who was a partner of the firm at the time the policy was effected retire from the firm without the consent of the insurer.

(2) In a contract of insurance of a motor vehicle against third-party claims there were conditions exempting the insurer (a) whilst the insured vehicle is conveying any load in excess of that for which it was constructed; (b) whilst it has a trailer attached thereto; & (c) in the case of loss through the driving of the insured vehicle in an unsafe condition. The insured vehicle, a Ford truck, took in tow a Manchester lorry that had broken down, also owned by the assured &, through the negligence of both drivers & through a defective tow-chain, a third party was killed:—Held: no breach of conditions (a) could occur by the insured vehicle taking another vehicle in tow, for weight carried has no relation to weight drawn; (3) on condition (b) & (c) that the lorry was not a "trailer" & the tow-chain was not a part of "the insured vehicle."

(4) This contract of insurance also provided that if at the time of the injury there should the insured & the co. in defending an action based on an accident, compliance by the insured with this condition is essential to the success of an action brought by an injured third person under sect. 24 of Insurance Act, 1925, c. 20, against the insurance co.—*WALTERS v. S. O. 1927 (c. 222), s. 85, sued deft., which had insured S. against liability for injury to another, for the amount of her judgment:—Held: the right of action given by s. 85 is simply a right to sue on the policy in the place & stead of the insured; pltf. must establish liability on the policy against the insurer in the same manner & to the same extent as if the action had been brought by the insured; & the facts, required to be established as part of pltf.'s case, that the bodily injury to another, insured against, had been inflicted by the insured's automobile, & that the insured was legally liable in damages to pltf. for the injury, are not established as against the insurer by the production of the judgment obtained by pltf. against the insured. sp. Vehicle bailed for period exceeding fourteen days—Whether bailor liable.—By Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928, s. 2, "owner" in relation to a motor-vehicle, has the same meaning as in the Motor-vehicles Act, 1924, viz. "Owner includes a bailee to whom a motor-vehicle is bailed for any period exceeding fourteen days, & also includes a person in possession of a motor-vehicle pursuant to a bill of sale. Where there are more owners of a motor-vehicle than one, every such owner is an owner for the purposes of this Act." Deft. W., Ltd., disposed of a motor car to defts. C. & I. on May 24, 1932, by a hire-purchase agreement, admitted to be a bailment, under which the car was bailed for a period exceeding fourteen days. On the same day notice of the sale was given & the car transferred to the names of the bailees, who were registered as owners, the car was licensed, & an insurance effected under Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928, for the year commencing June 1, 1932, the fees for all these purposes being paid by the bailees. On May 26, 1932, the son of pltf. was injured, & later died, as the result of a collision between his bicycle & the said car, driven at the time of the accident by a son of Collins. In an action brought by pltf. against both the bailees & the bailor, on an argument by consent before trial on the question of law whether W., Ltd., the bailor, was liable to pltf., it was admitted that that co. was not so liable at common law:—Held: in the definition of "owner" the specifying of the bailee as the owner in relation to a motor-vehicle bailed for a period exceeding fourteen days excluded any other person claiming under a different right from the meaning of "owner" in relation to that vehicle, the Act not contemplating that under a bailment the general owner (the bailor) & the special owner (the bailee) were both to be regarded as owners for the purposes of the Acts & subjected to the liabilities of ownership as imposed by the Acts. Therefore, W., Ltd., the bailor, was not liable to pltf.—ANTUNOVICH v. COLLINS, [1933] N. Z. L. R. 124.—N.Z.

sv. Compulsory third party insurance—Rights of third party.—The owner of a car against whom a decree in an action of damages had been pronounced, failed to make payment when charged, & his estates were sequestrated. Therefore the pursuer brought an action against the insurance co. with whom the owner of the car was insured for payment of the sum decreed for. The co. averred that, because of certain false statements made by the owner of the car in his proposal to them for insurance, the policy was ab initio void; & they maintained that, in any event, as a question was raised as to the validity of the policy, this matter, in terms of the policy, fell to be submitted to arbn. The pursuer maintained that, in a question with a third party, these contentions were not open to the co.:—Held: (1) the provisions of Road Traffic Act, 1930, did not confer on an injured third party a right to bring a direct action against the insurance co. for recovery of the damages suffered by him; (2) although Third Parties (Rights Against Insurers) Act, 1930, did confer such a right of direct action, that right was subject to all the conditions in the policy binding on the

be any other insurance subsisting, whether effected by the assured or any other person, covering the same the insurer should be liable to contribute only rateably. The insurer proved only that there was a policy in existence on the Manchester lorry against third-party claims at the time of the injury:—Held: the insurer, to succeed in his claim to contribute only rateably, must prove that there was a subsisting policy on the Manchester lorry covering the injury in question upon which that insurer could be called upon to pay.—*JENKINS v. Nevertheless pltf. brought an action in tort for & recovered from deft. the full amount of the damage:—Held: the fact of the request of pltf.'s insurers did not prevent pltf. from recovering, but he would hold the amount to the extent of the sum received from his insurers as trustee for them, they being subrogated to his rights.—*MORLEY v. sk. Liability of insurer for hospital expenses of voluntary passenger.—D. H. a voluntary passenger (not carried for hire or reward or by reason or in pursuance of a contract of employment) in A. C.'s private motor car, was injured in a collision between the car & an omnibus. He was taken to the R. V. Hospital where he remained for treatment for over two months as an intern patient. He sued A. C. & the owners of the omnibus for damages & recovered against A. C., the claim against the omnibus being dismissed. No claim was made for hospital expenses. The R. V. Hospital sued for these expenses the insurers of A. C., who had, pursuant to A. C.'s policy, paid the amount of the judgment & the Recorder of B. dismissed the civil bill. The R. V. Hospital appealed & BEST, L.J., stated a case for the opinion of the Ct. of Appeal:—Held: as defts. were "authorised insurers" who had made a payment in respect of the voluntary passenger's injury under a policy issued under Part II. of the Motor Vehicles & Road Traffic Act (Northern Ireland), 1930, they were bound by the terms of sect. 12 (1) of that Act to pay also pltf.'s expenses of the voluntary passenger's treatment of insured & another.]—By a policy of insurance against third party risks it was provided that the insurers should not be liable if an accident occurred while the insured motor car was being used otherwise than in accordance with a "Description of Use" clause in the policy. By that clause the use was limited to social, domestic & pleasure purposes & to the insurer's business, which was that of representative of a mercantile firm. An accident occurred while the car was being used by the insured & another representative of the same firm on their respective businesses:—Held: the car was being used at the time of the accident otherwise than in accordance with the "Description of Use" clause, & therefore the policy did not cover a loss sustained by the insured as a result of that accident.—*PASSMORE v. 3217q. Provision for control of proceedings by company—Admission of negligence of insured.—Pltf. took out with an insurance co. a motor insurance policy containing a clause that pltf. would not incur any expense whether in respect of litigation or otherwise or make any payment, settlement, arrangement, or admission of liability for which the co. might be liable under the policy without the written authority of the co., & that the co. should have absolute conduct & control of all or any proceedings against pltf. Pltf.'s car was run into by a motor lorry, the collision being caused solely by the negligence of the lorry driver. A passenger in pltf.'s car was seriously injured, & issued a writ against the owners of the lorry & also, at their request, against pltf. The latter informed the insurance co., & left the matter in its hands, as he was bound to do under the policy. The co. sent the papers to its solrs., who entered an appearance to the writ & acted in the conduct of the defence. Neither the co. nor the solrs. ever at any time communicated with pltf. in any way, & eventually the solrs. delivered a defence on behalf of pltf. admitting that the accident was caused solely by his negligence & wrote a letter to this effect to the solrs. opposing them. Having accidentally found out what was happening, pltf. protested to the local agent of the insurance co., to which agent the later wrote: "If we had repudiated liability we ran a very serious risk of the ct. holding a different view." At the trial of that action, judgment was entered against the present pltf. for £1,124 12s. 10d., damages & costs, which sums were at once discharged by the insurance co. Pltf. then claimed damages against the solrs. & the insurance co. for breach of duty, negligence & libel:—Held: (1) the terms of the policy clearly entitled the insurers to nominate a solr. to act in the conduct of the proceedings; (2) such solr. was bound to act bond fide in the common interest of the insurers & the insured, & upon the facts, he had not done so; (3) the damages for breach of duty were only nominal, since the sums recovered in the action were at once paid by the insurance co. Pltf. could only sue the solrs. in contract & had no cause of action against them in tort; (4) assuming that the occasion upon which the letter admitting negligence was written was a privileged one, there was evidence of malice.—*GROOM v. 3217r. — Invalidity of condition subsequent avoiding liability—What amounts to.—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 38, provides that "Any condition in a policy . . . issued or given for the purposes of this Part of this Act providing that no liability shall arise under the policy . . . in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy . . . shall be of no effect. . . ."

A policy of insurance insuring resp. against third-party risks contained a condition that "the corpn. shall not be liable for any accident loss or damage caused or sustained while any motor cycle in respect of which indemnity is granted under this policy is carrying a passenger unless a sidecar is attached." Resp., who on a certain date drove a motor cycle on a road with another person sitting behind him as a passenger on the pillion without a side-car being attached to the motor cycle, was charged with the offence of using a motor vehicle on a road without there being in force in relation to the user of the vehicle such a policy of insurance in respect of third-party risks as complied with the requirements of Part II. of Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43). The justices dismissed the information on the ground that the condition in the policy was of no effect by reason of Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 38, & that therefore the policy of insurance was in force on that occasion. On appeal to the Div. Ct.:—Held: Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 38, applied only to a condition in a policy "providing that no liability shall arise under the policy . . . in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy," whereas in the present case the condition circumscribed the operation of the policy from the beginning. Therefore, there was no policy in force where a passenger was being carried otherwise than in a side-car.—BRIGHT v. ASHFOLD, [1932] 2 K. R. 153; 101 L. J. K. B. 318; 147 L. T. 74; 96 J. st. — For private purpose—Owner insured for business use.—A woman, whose son was killed as a result of a motor accident, sued the driver of the vehicle involved, & obtained a decree against him for damages & expenses. She failed to recover anything under the decree. She thereafter sued the owner of the vehicle, averring that he had entrusted it to the driver, who was his farm manager, without placing any restrictions upon its use; that at the time of the accident the driver was using the vehicle with the owner's permission, but for his own private purposes; that the use of the vehicle was insured against third party risks only when it was being used in connection with the owner's business; & that the owner was in breach of his duty under sect. 35 (1) of Road Traffic Act, 1930, in permitting the vehicle to be used when its use was not so insured. Pursuer claimed the amount of the damages & expenses awarded to her in her action against the driver. The ct. allowed a proof before answer of these averments, in respect (a) that a breach of the duty enjoined by sect. 35 (1) would, if proved, infer civil liability, notwithstanding that the sect. provided a penalty; & (b) that pursuer's averments that the owner had permitted the driver to use the vehicle were relevant to be admitted to proof.

Opinion, per LORD MONCRIEFF, that pursuer had rightly based her claim of damages upon the amount of the damages & expenses which she had been awarded against the driver, & that the award against the driver having been made in a defended action, the owner would be entitled to challenge the amount of damages only upon specific averments that it was excessive.—HOUSTON v. BUCHANAN, [1937] S. C. 460.—SCOT.

sc. Accident while car lent.—Where an action is brought against an automobile owner for damage caused by the operation of the car while in the custody of a person to whom the owner had lent it, the insurer of the owner is entitled in deciding whether to defend the action on his behalf to rely on the statement made to it by him the person to whom he had entrusted the car was the person he named.—*ANDERSON v. ss. Effect of Law Reform Act, 1936.—The effect of sect. 9 of Law Reform Act, 1936, read in conjunction with the Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928, is that, provided deft. in an action is financially able to pay the judgment, pltf. is not concerned as to whether deft. can, as against his indemnifier, prove that within subsect. (7) of sect. 9 of Law Reform Act, 1936, the sum awarded is "within the limits fixed by the contract of insurance between the indemnifier & the insurer"; the word "limits" being given a wide interpretation to include "liability." If, on the other hand, deft. is bkpt., etc., the onus would be on pltf. in a suit against the insurer, instituted under sub-sects. (4) & (5) of sect. 9, of proving that the damages claimed are covered by the contract of insurance.—PETHERICK & PETHERICK v. WATERS & N. I. M. U. INSURANCE CO. (No. 2), [1937] N. Z. L. R. 309; 13 N. Z. L. J. 110.—N.Z.

sg. Extent of owner's liability for agent.—The effect of the Motor-vehicles Insurance (Third-party Risks) Act, 1928, is to make any person other than the owner who is in charge of a motor-vehicle the agent of the owner only for the purpose of creating in favour of the representatives of a person killed or of an injured person a cause of action against the owner; it does not make the owner liable in respect of some act or omission, such as fraud, committed by the agent after the owner's liability to pay damages has become complete, as the statute goes no further than to deem the person in charge of the car the owner's agent so far as acts or omissions in relation to the use of the car result in liability for damages for death or bodily injury.—HURLSTONE v. STRADMAN, [1937] N. Z. L. R. 708; 13 N. Z. L. J. 208.—N.Z.

—[Pltf. made to deflt. & other underwriters a proposal for insurance of a motor car, & disclosed the fact that he was a garage proprietor. The underwriters issued a policy which provided (inter alia) for indemnity against liability to third persons in respect of bodily injury in the event of accident arising out of the use of the car. The policy also expressly provided that it should not cover liability caused, sustained or incurred while the car was being used otherwise than for "private purposes," which were defined as meaning "social, domestic & pleasure purposes & use by the assured in person in connection with his business or profession. The term 'private purposes' does not include . . . use for any purposes in connection with the motor trade." A certificate of insurance under Part II. of the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), containing a similar limitation was also issued to pltf. While using the car, as the judge found, for a purpose in connection with the motor trade pltf. had an accident, as a result of which a third party claimed damages for personal injuries. The underwriters having refused to indemnify pltf., he claimed a declaration that they were bound to do so :—Held : (1) there was no inconsistency in the clause defining "private purposes" between the words "use by the assured in person in connection with his business" & the words excluding "use for any purposes in connection with the motor trade," & the fact that pltf. had disclosed that he was a garage proprietor did not entitle him to rely on the first part of the clause & ignore the second. The true construction was that the second half took out of the protection of the policy something which, but for it, the first half would have brought in, namely, use by a garage proprietor personally for the purposes of his business; (2) in view of the limitation appearing on the certificate, the issue of the certificate created no estoppel; (3) sect. 36 of 1930 Act merely defines the cover which a driver must obtain in order to escape the penal consequences of driving without a policy under sect. 35. Sect. 38 does not avoid a condition limiting the cover under a policy: it merely prevents an underwriter escaping liability to a third party by reason of some act or omission of the assured after the claim has arisen. The effect of a breach of the conditions in the policy is not to throw on the underwriter a burden which he has never agreed to undertake, but merely to put the assured, so far as the insurance provisions of the 1930 Act are concerned, in the same position as if he had never taken out a policy at all.—GRAY v. BLACKMORE, [1934] 1 K. B. 95; 103 L. J. K. B. 145; 150 L. T. 99; 50 T. L. R. 23; 77 Sol. Jo. 765.

—— A policy of insurance against third party risks was based on a proposal which contained the question: "Have you or any of your drivers ever been convicted of any offence in connection with the driving of any motor vehicle?" to which the insured answered "No." In fact, she & her driver had been convicted of two offences, namely, (a) of driving a motor vehicle without any suitable reflecting mirror, & (b) of unlawfully using a motor vehicle without having in force an insurance policy against third party risks :—Held : the answer was not untrue, since neither of the two convictions was in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle.

(2) The policy contained a condition whereby it was provided that if a claim under the policy was made & rejected, & an action was not commenced within three months of such rejection, all benefit under the policy should be forfeited :—Held : the condition was void under Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 38, in so far as it purported to invalidate a claim to be indemnified against third party risks.—REVELL v. LONDON GENERAL INSURANCE CO., LTD. (1934), 152 L. T. 258.

—Issue of false certificate of insurance—Statement as to date of commencement—Premium unpaid.]—An insurance co. issued a public liability motor car policy of insurance covering third-party risks, valid for a year & any further period for which they might accept payment for renewal. The policy was subject to a condition that no liability should arise until payment of the premium. At the expiration of the year, on June 3, no premium was paid, but it was paid on June 11, when a receipt was given acknowledging a renewal of the policy as from June 3. On the former date the co. also issued a certificate of insurance containing the statement alleged to be false, that the date of commencement of the insurance was June 4 :—Held : even assuming the statement to be false in fact, that alone was not sufficient to justify a conviction for issuing a certificate which was false to the knowledge of the co. within Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 112 (3), & the conviction must be quashed.—OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPN., LTD. v. —Effect of issue of certificate.]—I have a very strong feeling that the Legislature intended that the insurance co. should be bound, & that when they had once given a certificate which entitled a person to obtain a licence it should not be open to them afterwards to say that they had not in fact insured that person. While I am sure that was the intention of the Legislature, I am not at all certain they have carried out that intention in the language which has been employed in the Act of Parliament [Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43)] (RIGBY SWIFT, J.). —ADAMS v. —[—]Held : (1) on learning that insured had made a false statement in the proposal form the co. were entitled to consider their position for a reasonable time before deciding to repudiate liability, & on the facts, a reasonable time had not been exceeded; (2) sect. 1 (1) of Third Parties (Rights against Insurers) Act, 1930 (c. 43) only transferred to the injured third party such rights as the insured himself might have against the insurer, & the insurer was entitled as against the third party to rely on any defence which he could have raised against the insured; (3) sect. 36 (4) of Road Traffic

Act, 1930 (c. 43), did not deprive an insurance co. of the right to repudiate liability on a policy obtained by fraud, misrepresentation or concealment; (4) the issue of a certificate of insurance under sect. 36 (5) of Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), did not amount to an undertaking to all the world that the policy referred to was valid for all purposes & did not prevent the insurance co. from repudiating a policy obtained by fraud.—*McCORMICK v. 3217x. — Car lent to uninsured person—Accident—Right to recover against owner—Without suing driver.—The owner of a motor car who, in contravention of Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1), permits his car to be used by a person who is not insured against third party risks, is liable in damages to a third party who has been injured by the negligent driving of the uninsured person. In such a case the object & purview of the Act show that the penalties prescribed by sect. 35 (2) were not intended to be the sole remedy for a breach of the owner's statutory duty. Where a person uninsured against third party risks is permitted by the owner to use a car, & injury is caused by his negligent driving to a third party, the latter may, where the uninsured person is without means, sue the owner of the car directly for damages for breach of his statutory duty & need not first sue the uninsured person.—*MONK v. At the time of the accident & to the knowledge of both A. & B. the policy of insurance for third-party risks which had been kept on foot by A. had expired, but before its expiration A. had informed both B. & the insurers that B. must in future pay the premiums himself. C. did not take proceedings against B., but there were negotiations between them for a settlement of C.'s claim, which were not concluded in Nov. 1936, when B. died.—Held: in an action by C. against A., (1) B. was not the servant or agent of A. in driving the car; (2) A. was not liable in damages for breach of the statutory duty to insure under Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35; for an action could have been brought against B. in his lifetime, & judgment would have been satisfied out of B.'s assets, so that C. had suffered no damage in consequence of the breach.—*DANIELS v. vehicle a policy of insurance against third party risks & delivered to him a certificate of insurance. A cause of action covered by the policy arose in favour of third parties against the insured. Subsequently, the co., having a right to do so, elected to avoid the policy on certain grounds, & the policy was avoided & the certificate of insurance was properly cancelled. Thereafter, but before Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10, had come into force, the third parties brought their action against the insured, & after that sect. had come into force, they recovered judgment in that action. In an action brought under that sect. by the third parties against the insurance co. to recover the amount of the judgment:—Held: pltf's. were entitled to recover; inasmuch as a certificate of insurance had in fact been delivered to the insured within the meaning of the sect., the judgment sued upon had been obtained after the coming into force of the sect., & defts. had not obtained a declaration under sub-sect. (3) of the sect. that they were entitled to avoid the policy; & notwithstanding that the earlier action had been brought & the policy & certificate of insurance cancelled before the coming into force of the sect.—*CROXFORD v. The owner gave to the hiree a cover note against third party risks under a policy issued by the first defts. The cover note was subject to a condition excluding from the insurance various classes of persons, including Jews. Whilst driving the car the hiree collided with & injured pltf.:—Held: (1) the first defts. had not "permitted" the car to be used without an insurance against third party risks, as required by Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35, & had not committed a breach of statutory duty under that sect.; (2) the second deft. had "permitted" the car to be so used, & the pleadings disclosed a cause of action against him, notwithstanding that no judgment had been obtained against the hiree, & that the hiree had not been made a party to the action.—*RICHARDS v. 3217cc. — Extension of insurance to car driven with assent of assured—Effect of Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 36.—(1) A motor insurance policy declared that "this insurance shall extend to indemnify any person who is driving on the assured's order or with his permission" in respect of various liabilities, which included third party risks:—Held: upon the true construction of above sect., the insurers were freed from the requirements of Life Assurance Act, 1774 (c. 48), as to insurable interest & the presence in the policy of the name of the assured, & the insurers were legally bound to indemnify all "persons or classes of persons" referred to in the policy, whether parties to the contract of insurance or not. (2) Where in a motor insurance policy a particular car is specified as the subject of insurance, & by a clause in the policy its benefits are extended to the assured when driving another car with the owner's permission, the interest of the assured ceases when he parts with the specified car, & the extending clause falls together with the rest of the policy.—*TATTERSALL v. 3217ee. ——— Premium advanced by finance company—Certificate delivered to company.]—A policy of insurance in respect of a motor car was prepared for & signed by S., the premium being paid by M. F., Ltd., who by agreement were to be repaid by S. in instalments. Until the premium had been repaid in full M. F., Ltd., were to retain the policy & the certificate, which were delivered to them by the insurers. S. never saw the certificate. When driving the motor car S. was stopped & requested to produce his certificate of insurance. M. F., Ltd., produced the certificate within five days. Upon an information preferred against S. for unlawfully using a car without having in force in relation thereto a policy of insurance, the justices held that the certificate had not been delivered within Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 36 (5) to S., whom the justices held to be the person by whom the policy had been effected, & they convicted S. On appeal, S. pleaded that the delivery of the certificate to a person designated by the insured was sufficient compliance within sect. 36 (5) & alternatively that M. F., Ltd., were the persons by whom the policy was effected & delivery to them was a sufficient compliance with that sect.:—Held: (1) inasmuch as there was no evidence that M. F., Ltd., had received the certificate as agents for S., it could not be said that the certificate had been delivered to S.; (2) the policy was effected by S., & not by M. F., Ltd., & there was, therefore, no delivery to the person by whom the policy was effected within sect. 36 (5).—STARKEY v. HALL, [1936] 2 All E. R. 18; 80 Sol. Jo. 347, D. C.

3217ff. ——— Passenger carried by reason of contract of employment.]—A policy of insurance was taken out by D. in respect of a motor vehicle. The policy, which was headed "Commercial motor policy," incorporated a previous proposal by D. in which he had given a warranty or undertaking that passenger risk was not to be covered; it provided that the vehicle would be used only for general haulage & other trades, & that the insurance co. would indemnify D. against liability in respect of "death of or bodily injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle. . . . Provided always that the co. shall not be liable in respect of . . . (b) death of or bodily injury to any person in the employment of the insured arising out of & in the course of such employment; (c) death of or bodily injury to any person (other than a passenger carried by reason of or in pursuance of a contract of employment) being carried in or upon . . . such vehicle":—Held: the language of clause (c) was not to be construed as applying only to the death of or injury to a person in the employment of D. while being carried on the vehicle; it applied to any person being carried in pursuance of a contract of employment with another employer; & therefore when such a person, while being carried on the vehicle, was killed owing to the negligence of the driver, the insurance co. was bound to indemnify D. in respect of his liability to the representative of the deceased person.—*IZZARD v. 3217gg. Passenger in car—Payment for journey.]—Pltf. was a passenger in a motor car insured against third-party risks with debts. Pltf. & a friend had arranged to travel to London by train; but the owner of the car, having to go to London to give evidence, offered to take them for 25s. each. Upon the journey the car collided with a lorry. Pltf. recovered judgment for damages & costs against the owner of the car, & then brought this action to recover the sum so awarded from deft. insurance co., relying upon Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10. The car was insured under a private motor car policy for use for social, domestic & pleasure purposes. The owner was not, so far as was known, in the habit of carrying persons for payment, & pltf. was a stranger to him:—Held: (1) the policy did not cover the use which was made of the car on the journey in question; (2) the owner of the car was not bound by Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 36 (1), to have in force a policy of insurance to cover any liability he might incur to pltf. in the circumstances of this journey, which was an isolated occasion. The effect of the sub-sect. is only to require the owner to have such a policy in force where the vehicle is habitually used for the carriage of passengers for hire or reward.—*WYATT v. 3217hh. ——— Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10—When available.]—Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10, is a sect. which makes insurers liable in the circumstances & under the conditions specified in the whole of that sect., & not merely those specified in sub-sect. (1). Therefore insurers may protect themselves from liability under sect. 10 (1) if they comply with the conditions set out in sub-sect. (3) & obtain a declaration that the policy was obtained by the non-disclosure of a material fact or by a representation of some fact which was false in some material particular, such action for a declaration being brought within three months after the commencement of the proceedings in the running-down action in which judgment was given. In Croxford's case the running-down action was brought on Aug. 3, 1934, & therefore the last day on which the insurance co. could commence an action for a declaration was Nov. 3, 1934; but sect. 10 of the Act of 1934 did not come into operation until Jan. 1, 1935, & therefore the insurance co. could not have taken proceedings under sect. 10 (3) to obtain protection under that sect. because at that time the sect. had not come into operation, & it did not have a retrospective effect. In Norman's case it had been found as a fact that there was no contract of insurance between the insurance co. & the assured at the time of the accident. The running-down action was brought on Oct. 26, 1934, & therefore the three months within which the insurance co. must bring their action for a declaration would expire on Jan. 26, 1935:—Held: in neither case could sect. 10 of the Act of 1934 be applied so as to make the insurance co. liable.—*CROXFORD v. The pedestrian thereupon brought an action against the motorist's insurance co., basing her claim on Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10. The Act of 1934 received the royal assent on July 31, 1934, & sect. 10 came into operation on Jan. 1, 1935:—Held: sect. 10 was not retrospective to an accident which occurred before the sect. came into operation, & the action could not be maintained.—*DOLAN v. 3217kk. ———.—]—Pltf. obtained a judgment against T. in respect of injuries caused by the negligent driving of T.'s motor car. T. having no means, pltf. sued T.'s insurers, deft. corp., under the provisions of Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10 (1). T.'s insurance policy covered the use of his car "for social, domestic & pleasure purposes," & for use "in connection with his business or profession" as stated in the schedule. T. was a motor mechanic, & was described as such in the schedule, but in his spare time farmed a few sheep. At the time of the accident, which caused the injuries, the car was being used to convey some sheep. Pltf. relied (inter alia) upon the provisions of Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 12 (d):—Held: (1) T. must be regarded as carrying on a business of sheep-farming, as a sideline. At the time of the accident, his car was therefore being used not in connection with his business of a motor mechanic, but for the carriage of goods in connection with a business other than that stated in the policy & pltf. could not recover in this action; (2) this was not a question of the actual nature of the goods carried or their physical characteristics within Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 12 (d).—JONES v. WELSH INSURANCE CORPN., LTD., [1937] 4 All E. R. 149; 157 L. T. 483; 54 T. L. R. 22; 81 Sol. Jo. 886.

who had been injured by the van after the sale had been completed, obtained a judgment against the purchaser, & in the present action sought to recover the damages he had been awarded from the present defts. under the provisions of Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10. The motor van was sold for £10, of which £5 was paid when the van was handed over & the remaining £5 after the occurrence of the accident:—Held: (1) at the time of the accident, the purchaser could not be said to be driving the van by the order or with the permission of the vendor, as the van was then the purchaser's own property; (2) the insured was not entitled to assign his policy to a third party. An insurance policy is a contract of personal indemnity, & the insurers cannot be compelled to accept responsibility in respect of a third party who may be quite unknown to them.—PETERS v. GENERAL ACCIDENT FIRE & LIFE ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD., [1938] 2 All E. R. 267; 158 L. T. 476; 54 T. L. R. 663; 82 Sol. Jo. 294; 30 L. G. R. 583, C. A.

3217mm. ———.—]—By a policy of motor insurance, issued in Nov. 1935, defts. agreed to indemnify F. against third-party risks in respect of a motor vehicle. During the currency of that policy, an accident occurred, involving F., the owner of the motor vehicle, & two other persons, B. & C. B. brought an action against F. in respect of the accident, & C. was served with a third-party notice in that action. Notice of that third-party notice was duly given to the insurers. C., the third party, counterclaimed for damages against F., & recovered judgment against F. on the counterclaim. No notice of the counterclaim by the third party was given to the insurers. As that judgment remained unsatisfied, the third party brought an action against the insurers under Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10, claiming the amount of the judgment & costs:—Held: as the insurers had had no notice of the counterclaim in which the judgment was given, pltf. could not recover against the insurers. "The proceedings in which the judgment was given" in sect. 10 (2) (a) meant "the proceedings begun by a person who may for this purpose be regarded as a pltf., which results in the judgment upon which reliance is placed as against the insurers."—*CROSS v. W., while driving with a friend, fell ill, & allowed the friend to drive the side-car. While being so driven the side-car collided with a lorry, with the result that pltf. was injured. In an action against W., pltf. recovered damages & now sought to recover them from the insurance co. W., in a friendly & casual conversation with an agent of the insurance co., had mentioned that an action had been brought against him:—Held: (1) upon the construction of the policy the exception applied & W. would not have been able to recover thereunder, &, therefore, pltf. could not recover in this action under Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10; (2) notice to an insurance co. of proceedings against the insured must be something more formal than a casual mention of the proceedings in a conversation. There must be something which indicates that notice is being given.

3217oo. —.]—Pltf., who had been involved in a motor accident & suffered personal injuries, recovered judgment for £1,401 19s. 6d. against the impecunious driver of the car in fault. The judgment being unsatisfied, he brought the present action against the insurers under Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 10 (1). The co. pleaded that the car was not being used for social, domestic, or pleasure purposes, but was being used for hire, within the limitations as to use set out in the certificate of insurance & the descriptions of use in the policy. The car belonged to C., a garage proprietor, & was insured by him, with other cars. He had occasionally employed R. as a professional driver, but on this occasion R. had borrowed the car in question, without payment, to take a party of his friends to Southend. The trip had been arranged some time before the day of the accident. When R. fetched the car from the garage, he filled up with oil & petrol, for which he paid C. about 10s. This expenditure was subsequently reimbursed to R. by his friends:—Held: the car was being used for social & domestic purposes within the meaning of the policy, & there was no such arrangement as would amount to a hiring. Pltf. was therefore entitled to recover the damages awarded in the previous accident.—*MCCARTHY v. Before the policy was renewed the claimants discovered that the solr. was not in fact handing over money as soon as it was received, but this fact was not communicated to resps., & the policy was duly renewed. The claimants suffered loss through the acts or defaults of the solr., & they claimed indemnity under the policy. Resps. denied liability, alleging that the answers to the questions in the application were warranties & made the basis of the contract, & that by a condition in the policy it was rendered void by wrong answers to such questions:—Held: the answers to the questions were merely statements of fact as to the duties of the solr.

were distinct & independent contracts & deft. was liable under each of three of them to the extent of the amount stated in each of them for the payment of any damages sustained by reason of wrongful or dishonest dealing, on the part of the holder of the licence under said Act for whom the bonds were furnished, during the term of any licence held by him concurrent with the period for which each bond stood. With respect to another bond, the last bond issued, there was no liability thereunder, since the bonded agent did not hold a licence after the date the bond was issued, & the expression therein, "during the term of any real estate agent's licence, held by him under said Act," could not reasonably be interpreted as referring to any period before said date.—*WEBSTER v. sb. "Visible marks of force & violence made by a tool".—A policy of burglary insurance provided for indemnity against loss occasioned by felonious entry by "actual force & violence" of which force & violence "there shall be visible marks made upon the premises at the place of such entry by tools, etc." The visible mark upon the premises in question was a hole in the wire netting of a window screen which was rusty, but intact before the entry, & through which it was admitted the burglar had entered. A small piece of wood with rust marks on it was found outside the window:—Held: the trial judge was justified in inferring, as he did, that force & violence had been used to effect the entry, & that the visible mark thereof had been made by a tool of some sort. A stick used to break the wire netting of a screen is a "tool" within the meaning of the policy.—MULLETT v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO., [1929] 3 D. L. R. 140; 2 W. W. R. 146; 41 B. C. sc. "Excluding infidelity"—Effect of theft by director or servant of company.—The expression "excluding infidelity" in an insurance policy indemnifying a co. against the loss of moneys while looked up in a safe in specified premises excludes a theft of the money by any director of the co., as also theft by a servant of the co. who owes a duty of faithfulness to the co. in respect of its moneys.—*FRENCH HAIRDRESSING SALOONS, LTD. v. quence of which they incurred loss, & they brought this action to recover the amount of such loss from their underwriters:—Held: whatever might be the limitations suggested by the recital the operative part of the policy was unambiguous, & upon a true construction of the words used applts.' loss was covered, & their claim must therefore succeed.—*LAZARD BROS. & CO., LTD. v. 3260a. "Dishonesty"—[Discounting bills of exchange subsequently dishonoured.]—Pltf. was insured by two policies, subscribed by deft., against loss or deprivation of bills of exchange through theft & any other loss whatsoever through theft or other dishonesty. During the currency of the policies pltf. was induced by false representations to discount certain bills of exchange. The bills were dishonoured, & pltf. brought an action on the policies on the ground that he had suffered a loss through having dealt in the bills. Deft. contended that the above provision in the policies only covered accidental loss of documents or physical deprivation of the possession of documents:—Held: pltf.'s loss was caused by dishonesty within the policy.—*WASSERMAN v. 3260b. "Money made away with by theft"—[Bonds fraudulently issued by branch manager.]—Resps., pltf. in the action, were a Belgian bank, with headquarters at Brussels & branches at a number of towns throughout Belgium. In the course of their business as bankers resps. took money from customers on deposit, & it was their practice when receiving money on deposit to give the customer a bond undertaking to repay the money on a stated date. For a long time bonds of this kind were issued both by the head office & by the branches of resps.; but at the end of 1929 they decided that, in order to keep a better account of bonds outstanding, for the future bonds should only be issued by the head office. They accordingly instructed their branch managers that when after that date a customer should wish to place money on deposit the branch manager concerned must inform the head office, & the head office would then issue the necessary bond. Notwithstanding those instructions the manager of resps.' Malines branch, who had retained in his possession a number of the old bond forms, continued, without the knowledge of the head office, to issue bonds to customers who left money with him on deposit, & he used the money so left with him for his own purposes. Subsequently the fraud of the branch manager was discovered, & resps. were obliged to pay to the customers the face value of the bonds which he had issued. At the time when the branch manager was thus acting fraudulently resps. held at Lloyd's policy of insurance, of which the present applt. was one of the underwriters, protecting them against all direct losses suffered by them by reason, inter alia, of any money in which they were interested being lost or made away with by theft. They claimed to be indemnified under the policy for the sums which they had lost owing to the branch manager's fraud, & as the underwriters refused to pay they brought this action to enforce their claim:—Held: in the circumstances resps. were bound to honour the bonds which had been fraudulently issued by the branch manager; the money paid to the branch manager by the customers for those bonds was money in which resps. were interested or the custody of which they had undertaken, & which had been made away with by the theft of the branch manager; & the loss therefore came within the terms of the policy.—*ALGEMEENE BANKVEREENIGING v. upon a highway. Condition 3 of the policy was that it should apply "only to a car for private personal use," & that no liability should be incurred if & when it was being used otherwise; & condition 4 expressly excluded liability for loss or damage arising while the car was "let out for hire." The car was normally used in a private hiring business conducted by the owner, & was only rarely employed by him for private personal purposes. After returning from a hire late one night it was put in its garage, & was shortly afterwards destroyed by fire. The owner made a claim under the policy, but the co. denied liability:—Held: the co. was not liable, in respect that the risk to which the car was exposed while in the garage was incidental to its ordinary employment, i.e. in the hiring business, & accordingly, the loss was one which was excluded by the policy. — *MURRAY v. Preparatory to its use in a race in which he intended to compete, pltf. entrusted the car to an engineer to be overhauled. g xviii. — Impossibility of repair—Discharge of insurer.—Pliffs' motor car was damaged by accident on Jan. 30, 1931, & on the same day towed to a garage in Napier. The motor car was insured under Lloyd's New Zealand motor-car policy, which was subscribed, amongst others, by deft. While still in the garage an agent of deft. authorised the car to remain there & instructed the proprietors to make an estimate of the damage. The estimate was prepared, but on Feb. 3, 1931, the garage was damaged by earthquake & completely destroyed by fire following earthquake. The fire completely destroyed the motor car. The material provisions of the policy were that the underwriters should "indemnify the insured" as to "any damage occasioned by accidental external means" one of the conditions if he paid an extra premium the policy would protect him whoever might be driving the car, & applt. paid the extra premium accordingly. During the currency of the policy the car, while being driven by a son of applt., came into collision with a cyclist. The cyclist brought an action against applt. for damages, & applt. referred the claim to resps., who repudiated liability on the ground that at the time when the policy was taken out applt. had failed to disclose a material fact. It appeared that before the insurance was effected applt.'s son had been convicted several times of motoring offences, chiefly in relation to a motor-cycle, & resps. contended that this was a material fact which

being that the underwriters "repair, reinstate, or replace any motor car or any part thereof destroyed or damaged, or may settle for the damage in money":—Held: on the construction of the policy the only legal obligation imposed on the underwriters was to repair, reinstate, or replace, & settlement in money was only at the option of the underwriters; & as, through no fault of the underwriters, it had become impossible to repair, they were discharged from liability.—*WRIGHT, STEPHENSON & CO., LTD. v. o i. ——.—Applt. was insured by resp. co. against loss or damage to his automobile by fire, the policy covering other hazards also. His application, made a part of the policy, stated, item 4, that the automobile "will be chiefly used for private purposes only"; & item 8, that he had made no claim for loss by fire within the last three years preceding the application in respect of the ownership or operation of any automobile; & that if the applicant knowingly misrepresented or omitted to communicate any circumstance required by the application to be made known to the insurer, the contract should be void as to the risk undertaken in respect of which the misrepresentation or omission was made. The policy provided, under the heading "Exclusions from Perils," that resp. should not be liable for loss or damage arising while the automobile was being used otherwise than for the purposes specified in said item 4, or "if rented or leased." During the term of the policy, applt., who had taken the car to B.'s garage for repair, agreed, on request of B., who stated he was overhauling his own car & promised, for his use of applt.'s car, to make certain adjustments & repairs, to allow B. to use his car & to leave it in B.'s garage until said work was done, but stipulated that applt. or his wife could use the car whenever they wished, & they did use it while it remained at B.'s garage. Therefore where with the authorisation of the owner of a crop it is insured in his name, but for the benefit of another who pays the premiums but has no interest in the crop, the policy is a wagering policy & void; even though at the time the true facts are known to the insurer's local & general agents through whom it is issued.—*MOHRING v. The lands had been assessed for hail insurance purposes to pftfs. Deft. pleaded that pftfs.' claims were referred, in compliance with Municipal Hail Insurance Act, R. S. S., 1930, to its directors who apportioned the indemnities for the damage in question between pftfs. & their vendor, & that under sect. 47 of the Act the decision of the directors both as to the amount of the indemnities & the apportionment thereof was final & conclusive. While the policy was in force, gas accidentally escaped through a break in the service pipe located under the premises of a customer & caused a conflagration which did extensive damage to the customer's premises, the break resulting from the negligent installation of the pipe by resp.'s servants some years before. For this damage resp. was adjudged liable, & after satisfying the judgment brought an action against applt. on the policy for indemnity. The service pipe belonged to the owner of the building, but, like all other such pipes in the city, was installed by the resp. for the owner, who paid for it. At that time he had not his son in mind. Applt.'s claim against resps. was referred to arbn. as required by the policy, & the arbitrator awarded in favour of resps. on the ground that a material fact had not been disclosed. 3279d. — Effect of removal of motive power.]—

The claimant made to resps. a written proposal that they should insure a motor lorry, & in reply to a question on the proposal form he stated that the vehicle would be garaged on his own premises. Resps. accepted the proposal & issued a policy which covered damage to the vehicle & to its necessary accessories by accidental fire. During the currency of the policy the claimant, finding it necessary to repair the lorry, removed the engine from the lorry in the garage to a workshop of his at some distance. The night after the repair of the engine was completed the engine was destroyed by fire. On a claim under the policy the resps. repudiated liability on the ground (inter alia) that a lorry was not a motor lorry when it had been deprived of its motive power:—Held: the engine & body together constituted the insured lorry, & the mere fact of the removal of the engine from the body for the time being did not deprive the claimant of his right to an indemnity under the policy.—SEATON v. LONDON GENERAL INSURANCE CO., LTD. (1932), 48 T. L. R. 574; 76 Sol. Jo. 527.

3282a. — Goods supplied in replacement of goods lost—Right to retain although lost goods subsequently found.]—(1) By a Lloyd's policy pltf. & other underwriters insured deft. against "all loss wheresoever which the assured may sustain by the loss of or damage to" certain specified articles, one of which was a pearl necklace. During the currency of the policy deft. missed the necklace & informed the representative of the underwriters that she had lost it. She made a thorough search of her house for it, & afterwards at the suggestion of the underwriters a further search & inquiries were made, but without result. An agreement was then entered into between the underwriters & deft. that they should give her by way of replacement of the necklace other articles of jewellery up to its insured value. After she had received under the agreement articles of somewhat less than a third of that value the necklace was found at her house, where it fell out of an evening cloak in which it had become concealed. In an action by pltf. against deft. claiming a declaration that the necklace had not been lost, rescission of the replacement agreement, & the return of the articles which she had received under that agreement:—Held: the replacement agreement was in the circumstances a valid & binding agreement unaffected by mistake or misrepresentation on its true construction it did not contain an implied term that if the necklace should be found the agreement should be void; & under it deft. was entitled to retain the articles which she had received & to receive other articles up to the agreed value, the underwriters taking the necklace as salvage.

(2) Uncertainty as to recovery of the thing insured is, in my opinion, in non-marine matters the main consideration on the question of loss. In this connection it is, of course, true that a thing may be mislaid & yet not lost, but, in my opinion, if a thing has been mislaid & is missing or has disappeared, & a reasonable time has elapsed to allow of diligent search & of recovery, & such diligent search has been made & has been fruitless, then the thing may properly be said to be lost (ROCHE, J.).—*HOLMES v. ar. Disability.]—Pltf. was insured under policies containing a total & permanent disability clause which provided for the payment of a disability monthly income during the continuance of a disability under which he would be "continuously & wholly prevented thereby for life from engaging in any occupation or employment for wage or profit." In 1931 pltf.'s vision began to fail &, as the result of the acceptance of a claim made by him under said clause, monthly payments were made to him until Dec. 1936, when the insurer refused to continue the payments. Pltf.'s disease was an incurable one, known as retinitis pigmentosa, which in such cases as pltf.'s progresses from early middle life until its ends in total blindness at about the age of sixty. In pltf.'s case it was then approaching its final stage. Prior to his disability pltf. had been the manager of a bottling co. His duties required him to do a lot of travelling by automobile & otherwise but, when his sight began to fail, his doctors forbade him to drive a car, or to cross streets without a guide; he was also unfitted, because of the eye strain involved, for office work. He, therefore, ceased work altogether in 1931:—Held: it was pltf.'s capacity for employment or for an occupation yielding a profit, not his chance of securing or engaging in the same in an uncertain market, that was contemplated by said clause. Therefore, it being found that pltf. was wholly & permanently disabled from engaging in his former regular occupation or employment & in view of his age (fifty-one) & condition had no appreciable capacity to engage in any other occupation or employment for wage or profit, & his incapacity was permanent, that his case fell within said clause & he was entitled to the benefits thereof.—*BORODITSKY v. insurance against accidental loss of baggage contained a condition that "the whole of the baggage must be insured, & not merely a portion of same either in respect of value or package":—Held: this condition did not mean that if the baggage were underestimated, that would be an answer to the policy. The condition merely meant that the insurance was to apply to the whole of the baggage in bulk & value.

(2) By condition 5 of the policy: "Jewelry, watches, field-glasses, cameras, & other fragile or specially valuable articles must be separately declared & valued":—Held: the condition enumerated things by description, classes, & not individual things. Where the question was whether a fur coat said to have been worth £240 & found to be worth £175 should have been separately declared & valued, the question of construction was not whether that fur coat was a specially valuable article but whether furs or fur coats, as a class, were specially valuable articles within the meaning of the condition. Applying the ejusdem generis rule, the question was whether furs or fur coats were specially valuable articles in the same sort of sense that jewelry, watches, field-glasses, & cameras were fragile or specially valuable articles; (3) also, furs or fur coats, being worn as a common-place article of dress by any woman of any sort of comfortable means, were not such specially valuable articles within the meaning of condition 5.—*KING v. Before Oct. 1899, when war was declared between the Transvaal Republic & this country, pltfs. had effected with deft., a British subject, a policy of insurance of certain gold products of their mine, the perils insured against including "enemies," & "arrests, restraints, & detentions of kings, princes, & people." A few days after war was declared the agents of the Transvaal Government seized & carried away some of the gold products insured. Pltfs. had shut down their mine when war was declared, & there was nothing to show that they intended to continue their business or mining operations in the Transvaal afterwards. In an action on the policy to recover in respect of the gold products so seized:—Held: there was no ground of public policy which prevented the policy of insurance from continuing in force after war was declared, & therefore pltfs. were entitled to recover.—*NIGEL GOLD MINING CO., LTD. v. The father died on July 25, 1925, having paid up to that time all the premiums accruing due upon the policy. The son attained twenty-one years of age on Sept. 26, 1916. After the death of the father, all premiums were paid either by the son or upon his behalf. Upon the death of the son, the insurance moneys became payable, & the question was whether they were payable to the personal representative of the father or to the personal representative of the son:—Held: (1) the father had not constituted himself a trustee for the son; (2) the Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 56, did not, in the circumstances of this policy, give the son a legal right to receive the policy moneys; (3) the policy moneys were, therefore, payable to the legal personal representative of the father.—*Re FOSTER, HUDSON v. 3289c. Machinery — Latent defect — Whether a casualty.]—Pltfs., who were marine engineers, took out a policy on "machinery & the like (sundry small contracts & repair jobs . . .) from & during construction." The insurance covered "all risks incidental to testing the machinery" & was "also specially to cover cost of repairs &/or loss of &/or damage to the interest . . . through any latent defect in the thing insured." Pltfs. contracted to fit a steamer with a new intermediate pressure cylinder, but the cylinder, when tried under steam, was found to be defective, & a second one having also been found to be defective, pltfs. had to fit a third. In an action on the policy:—Held: as the existence of a latent defect was not a casualty & the cost of replacing a thing which had a latent defect was not recoverable as loss or damage due to latent defect, & as the words "cost of repairs" did not cover expenditure on the replacement of material which was inherently defective, & as the testing merely revealed, & did not cause, the latent defect,

3289d. Solicitor's indemnity policy—Damages paid in respect of champertous agreement.—A solr. took out an indemnity policy, which insured him against loss arising by reason of any neglect, omission or error while acting in his professional capacity. During the currency of the policy he sustained loss through having, without realising the fact, entered into a champertous agreement. On a claim to be indemnified:—Held: (1) the agreement being champertous, & therefore illegal & contrary to public policy, a claim in respect of loss due to having contracted it was not maintainable; (2) the loss in respect of which indemnity was claimed did not arise by reason of any neglect, omission or error committed by the solr. in his professional capacity, but arose from his entering into a personal speculation.—HASELDINE v. HOSKEN, [1933] 1 K. B. 822; 102 L. J. K. B. 441; 148 L. T. 510; 49 T. L. R. 254, C. A.

Fraud by employee.—Certain solrs. had taken out an insurance policy against loss arising from any claim which might be made against them by reason of any "neglect, omission or error" committed on the part of the solrs. or any person employed by them, in or about the conduct of any business conducted by or on behalf of the solrs. in their professional capacity as solrs. A clerk employed by the solrs. received sums of money from clients of the solrs. for investment in securities which did not, & were not intended to, exist & these sums the clerk had applied to his own purposes. The facts being discovered, the solrs. paid their clients' claims & sought to be indemnified under the insurance policy:—Held: the wording of the policy was not apt to cover the loss sustained by the solrs. as a result of the clerk's fraudulent acts.—DAVIES v. HOSKEN, [1937] 3 All E. R. 192; 53 T. L. R. 798; 81 Sol. Jo. 589.

3289f. Loss due to advances on invalid documents—Daily advances on invoices.—By a policy of insurance, under which pltf. bank was to be indemnified against all losses to which it might be put by reason of its having made loans against documents which might prove to have been invalid, it was provided that the insurers were to pay claims only for the excess of $25,000 ultimate net loss "by each & every loss or occurrence." Pltf. bank agreed in Mar. 1924, to make advances to one B., upon the security of B.'s promissory notes & invoices in respect of goods sold by B., in the course of his business. Almost daily from Apr. 1924, to Nov. 1930, B. sent to pltf. bank a number of invoices together with a promissory note for the total amount of the invoices. The amount of the note & invoices was debited to B.'s loan account & credited to his current account, upon which B. was able to draw. From time to time payments of the invoices were received from B. & these were credited to the loan account. The total amount of the invoices on any one day never exceeded $25,000. By sending fictitious invoices, B. obtained from the bank on loan $400,000 more than was owed to him by his customers. In Nov. 1930, B. was insolvent, & in Apr. 1931, he was adjudicated bkpt. The bank sought to recover the amount of its loss under its policy of insurance:—Held: each day's loan was a separate loss or occurrence, & as the loan on any one day never exceeded $25,000, pltf. bank could recover nothing under the policy.—PHILADELPHIA NATIONAL BANK v. By an Act of Parliament of 1870, the capital was reduced to one million dollars with power to increase the same to four million dollars in sums of not less than one million dollars. The business of the co. was to be carried on in two distinct branches, Life & Accident Insurance business, & to be known as the Life Branch, & other forms of insurance to be known as the General Branch business. The capital stock of one million dollars was to apply to the Life Branch only, with power to increase the same to two million dollars; authority was given to raise one million dollars for the purposes of the General Branch business with power to increase the same to two million dollars. In 1871, the powers of the co. were by statute restricted to Life & Accident Insurance, & it was further provided that "All provisions of the Act of Incorporn. of the said co., & the Act amending the same, which are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, are hereby repealed." In its report to the Department of Insurance the co. stated its capital to be four million dollars, & the Superintendent of Insurance ruled that it could only be two million dollars & amended the report accordingly. Hence the present appeal:—Held: the capital of the co. for Life & Accident Insurance business was fixed at two million dollars by the Act of 1870 & was not altered by subsequent legislation. 144a. ——— Adjournment necessary in public interest.]—The Licensing Rules, 1921, provide: "4. Where it is intended to consider any proposal to make or vary any order" relating (inter alia) to permitted hours "the clerk to the justices shall cause a notice thereof . . . to be published. . . . 5. Upon the consideration of any proposal . . . the justices shall take such steps as seem to them fit for the purpose of ascertaining local opinion. . . ."

On Feb. 7, 1936, licensing justices held their general annual licensing meeting at which they decided provisionally not to vary the permitted hours, & adjourned that meeting to Mar. 6, 1936. On Mar. 3, 1936, the justices were informed by their clerk that at the adjourned meeting an application would be made, on behalf of persons interested, to re-open the question of permitted hours on the ground that the position of licensees in the division had become acute because an adjoining division had adopted a later terminal hour. On Mar. 6, 1936, the adjourned meeting was held, when the said application was made to the justices, who considered the desirability of re-opening the question, decided that in the altered circumstances it was in the public interest to ascertain public opinion in the district, &, being unable to do more until notice had been published, further adjourned the meeting to Mar. 20, 1936. On Mar. 20, 1936, due notice thereof having been given, the second adjourned meeting was held at which the justices, after hearing persons as to local opinion, made an order that the permitted hours should be varied as therein specified:—Held: on the true construction of the enactments & rules & in the circumstances above stated, the order of the justices varying the hours was valid, inasmuch as, (a) at the adjourned meeting held on Mar. 6, 1936, within one month of the original meeting, the justices had gone so far as to consider a proposal to vary an order within the meaning of these words in rule 4; (b) the justices, having begun to consider that proposal at an adjourned meeting held within one month of the original meeting, & being unable to deal with it fully at that meeting, were entitled to adjourn the meeting further for the consideration of the same proposal, as distinct from any new business, to Mar. 20, 1936, though that date was not within one month from the date of the original meeting.—*R. v. The owners of each house submitted to the licensing justices plans of proposed alterations, & the owners of one of the houses offered to pay £1,250 to the compensation fund if the alterations were sanctioned. The same licensing justices sat as compensation authority to consider the question of redundancy, & decided to renew the licence of the house whose owners had offered the contribution, it appearing from the evidence that that house, when new publican's licence should be granted in any licensing district except when a licence had been forfeited or had "otherwise ceased to exist":—Held, the words "otherwise ceased to exist" did not apply to a ceasing to exist owing to a no-licence vote, & therefore an application by a publican for a licence in an area which since 1903 had been a no-licence area by vote could not be heard.—*SCALES v. altered, could be made the better of the two. They then, as licensing justices, approved the alterations to that house:—Held: (1) in considering the question of the contribution offered to the compensation fund the licensing justices had taken extraneous matter into account, & as this must necessarily have affected their minds as compensation authority, their decision must be quashed; (2) it was contrary to the spirit of the Licensing Acts, though it might be within the letter of them, that the powers of the compensation authority should be delegated to the licensing committee so that the two bodies were identical, it being clearly intended that they should be separate & independent bodies.—*R. v. occupation.]—Licensed premises consisted mainly of premises held by a brewery co. on lease & to a lesser extent of an extension of the original premises built on an adjoining site held by the co. in fee simple, the licensee being an employee of the co. The lease expired on May 6, 1933, but the co. & the licensee remained in occupation of the whole premises. On July 18 a private Act became law by which local authorities were empowered to acquire certain property, including the premises in question, to aid in the construction of a tunnel. On Oct. 6, in proceedings instituted by the lessors under the lease, an order was made for the possession of the leasehold part of the premises as from May 6. On Oct. 21 the licensee gave notice of an application to the licensing justices under Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 24 (2) (a), for the special removal of the licence to other premises owned by the brewery co. on the ground that the premises in respect of which the licence had been granted were about to be pulled down under an Act for a public purpose. On Oct. 24 the co. & the licensee ceased to occupy the premises:—Held: (1) as the licensee was the holder of the licence which had been granted in respect of the premises & as the premises were about to be pulled down under an Act for a public purpose, the licensing justices were entitled in their discretion to grant the licensee an order for the special removal of the licence, although at the time of his application therefor he was not in lawful occupation of the leasehold part of the premises.

Per CUR.: there is no provision in the Licensing (Consolidation Act), 1910 (c. 24), which requires appct. for the special removal of a licence to be in actual occupation of the licensed premises at the time of his application.

(2) The order being for a special as distinct from an ordinary removal, the consent of the lessors to the order was not necessary; (3) as the lessors were never in a position to apply for the transfer of the licence to their nominee or its removal to other premises belonging to them so long as the licensee remained the holder of the licence & he & the co. remained in occupation of the premises or part of them, they had not been deprived of any right vested in them so to do & were, therefore, not entitled to a writ of certiorari to quash the order.—*R. v. 292a. ————.]—Though licensing justices have no jurisdiction to make the grant of an ordinary removal of a licence subject to any condition as to payment of monopoly value, they are entitled to refuse the removal upon the sole ground that it would confer a great pecuniary gain upon appct., & that he ought to apply for a new licence & pay monopoly value.—*R. v. The justices refused to sanction the proposed alterations, unless appcts. bricked up a door which was in the yard behind the premises, & which gave access to a site on which a public market place was being erected:—Held: the words of Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 71, which were descriptive of the alterations requiring the justices' consent, did not limit the justices to consideration of those named matters; & it was their duty to consider all relevant matters, of which the means of access to the premises might be one.—*R. v. Plans of the proposed alterations were duly deposited with the clerk to the justices. The justices came to the conclusion that they had no power to grant the application, as the bulk of the alterations was to premises not already licensed, but they were ready to approve the alterations in so far as they related to the premises already licensed:—Held: the justices came to a correct conclusion, because, under Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 71, they had no power to sanction alterations which involved an extension of the licensed premises, as was here obviously contemplated by the licensee.—*R. v. Objection was taken, on the ground that a condition could not be attached to a justices' licence whereby the licensee was prohibited from serving intoxicating liquor to any but members of a limited class, & that, therefore, in imposing such a condition, the confirming authority was acting without jurisdiction:—Held: (1) there was no excess or usurpation of jurisdiction, as the condition was imposed after proper consideration by the confirming authority of the relevant facts of the particular case, & in proper exercise of their discretion under Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 14 (1); (2) it was wrong to assume that there could be no licensed premises unless they had the characteristics of an inn.—*R. v. The solr. duly appeared & opposed, & the compensation authority refused the renewal, subject to payment of compensation. Three of the justices who sat & voted as members of the compensation authority had been parties to the resolution of the licensing justices authorising a solicitor to appear on their behalf:—Held: the three justices were disqualified from sitting on the compensation tribunal on the ground of bias, & the decision of the tribunal must be set aside.—*FROME UNITED BREWERIES CO. v. The special orders authorised the licensee to sell intoxicants on nineteen Sundays during the summer months, being the occasions on which the ry. co. ran excursion steamers & trains to & from the place at which the refreshment rooms were situated :—Held : the justices had no power to grant the special orders; (1) because the holder of a six-day licence is absolutely prohibited by sect. 58 of the Act from selling intoxicants to the public on Sunday; (2) because the occasions were not "special occasions" within sect. 57 (1).—*R. v. The justices, who were the local authority for a division including a coastal area, on an application under Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 57 (1), made an order purporting to be a special order of exemption thereunder exempting the holder of a justices' on-license in that area from the general provisions relating to permitted hours, for the hours between 10 p.m. & 10.30 p.m. on every day except Good Friday & Sundays, during the statutory period of summer time in the year 1933 as being a "special occasion" within the sub-sect. The application had been made on behalf of a number of specified licensees in the division, & the justices had decided to grant the special order to those licensees whose premises were in the coastal area & who might apply therefor, the above order being one of the intended orders which had been applied for & drawn up. a special order of exemption as they had jurisdiction to make under the sub-sect., inasmuch as the period of summer time for which it was granted was not a "special occasion" within the sub-sect., & the extent of the area & the number of the licensed premises to which it was applicable showed that it was general in its scope; as the justices in making the order had exceeded their jurisdiction, certiorari would lie in the absence of any provision to the contrary, & there was no such provision in sect. 102 of the Act or elsewhere; & consequently that the order nisi should be made absolute.—*R. v. Before making the order, the justices heard evidence which satisfied them that the special requirements of the district rendered the order desirable. The evidence was to the effect that during the summer months many inhabitants by reason of recreation & hours of work could not obtain reasonable refreshment before 10 o'clock. Appct. sought to have the order quashed, on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction, in that there was no evidence before the justices of any "special requirements of the district" within sect. 1 of the Act of 1921:—Held: quite apart from the weight of the evidence, which was essentially a matter for the justices themselves, there was a mass of evidence of "special requirements of the district," upon which the justices were entitled to make the order, & there was no usurpation of jurisdiction.—*R. v. 625a. —.—The House of Commons has the privilege of regulating its own internal affairs & procedure, including the sale, within the precincts of the House, of intoxicating liquor without a licence, through its employees in the Refreshment Department of the House.

Appct. applied in the police ct. for summonses against certain members of the Kitchen Committee of the House of Commons & the manager of the Refreshment Department of the House on the ground that they had on two occasions unlawfully sold by retail intoxicating liquor for the sale of which they did not hold a justices' licence as required by Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 65. The magistrate held that, assuming that there had been a sale of liquor without a licence, his jurisdiction was excluded by the privileges of the House & he declined jurisdiction. Rules nisi having been obtained by the appct. for orders in the nature of mandamus calling on the magistrate, the members of the Kitchen Committee affected & the manager of the Refreshment Department to show cause why the magistrate should not proceed to hear & determine the applications for the summonses:—Held: in the sale of liquor in the precincts of the House without a licence, the House was acting, through its Kitchen Committee & its employee, the manager of the Refreshment Department, in a manner which fell within the scope of the internal affairs of the House & therefore, within the privileges of the House so that no ct. of law had jurisdiction to interfere.—*R. v. 626a. Unlicensed room in licensed premises—Buying from licensed premises for customer.—Applt. J. was acting as "city waiter" at a meeting of a Buffalo Lodge of which he was a member. The meeting was held in an unlicensed room within the curtilage of licensed premises of which applt. N. was the licensee. It was J.'s duty to obtain the refreshments ordered by the members. He was observed on several occasions to go to the bar of the licensed premises & purchase, & pay for a number of glasses of beer, which he carried on a tray to the room where the meeting was held, & distributed to the members who had ordered them, receiving the price (but no more) which he had paid at the bar. The justices convicted J. of selling intoxicating liquor without a licence & N. of being privy to the sale:—Held: on these facts there was no evidence of a sale by J. The beer was not at any time his property.—JONES v. MIGHALL, NELSON v. MIGHALL (1932), 96 J. P. 395; 48 T. L. R. 636; 30 L. G. R. 412, D. C.

627a. Club—Bought at outside wine dealers—Place of appropriation.—(1) For the purposes of the Licensing Acts a sale of intoxicating liquor takes place at the premises where the liquor is appropriated to the contract.

(2) Licensing Act, 1921 (c. 42), s. 5 (b), does not authorise a sale of intoxicating liquor during non-permitted hours.—MIZEN v. OLD FLORIDA, LTD.; EGAN v. MIZEN (1934), 50 T. L. R. 349; 78 Sol. Jo. 298, D. C.

678a. —. —. —. Seizure of liquor not condition precedent to conviction of persons.—It is not a condition precedent to a presumption under Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (c. 24), s. 82 (3), being raised that a person found on premises is there for the purposes of illegally dealing in intoxicating liquor, that the constable who has entered under a search warrant under sect. 82 (1) should have seized & removed any intoxicating liquor found therein. In order to comply with sect. 82 (1), it is not necessary for the constable to seize all the intoxicating liquor found on the premises which there is reasonable ground to suppose is there for the purpose of unlawful sale. Hence where forty-six persons, non-members, were found on the premises of a registered club unlawfully dealing in intoxicating liquor the seizure of five glasses of beer was held to be a sufficient seizure.—HAMMOND v. HANLON, [1935] 1 K. B. 474; 104 L. J. K. B. 239; 153 L. T. 13; 99 J. P. 134; 51 T. L. R. 195; 33 L. G. R. 12; 30 Cox, C. C. 215, D. C.

sw. More liquor on premises than reasonably required for use of residents—Evidence of unlawful sale.—Proof of the fact of there being on the premises of an unlicensed person more liquor than is reasonably required for the use of the persons residing therein is, by Licensing Act, 1915, s. 237, to be deemed prima facie evidence both of an unlawful sale of liquor & that that sale was made by the person whose premises they are, whether independent evidence of a sale given or not.—*SCALES v. or his servants or agents, consented to, or consciously allowed, the drunken man to remain on the premises, & a "permission" in this sense had not been established.—McFARLAND v. SPARKS, [1926] N. Z. L. R. 689.—N.Z.

669 II. —. —. —. —. Complaint charging licensee personally.—In a prosecution under a complaint which charged an hotel-keeper that "you did supply" liquor to a person in a state of intoxication, it was proved that the liquor had not been supplied by accused, but by his son & assistant in the accused's absence. The accused was convicted of the offence charged:—Held: the complaint was not lacking in specification, in respect that, in a prosecution under Licensing Acts, it was unnecessary to state the name of the person through whom the offence had been committed, unless special circumstances required such a statement in fairness to accused dismissed.—*HALL v. It was proved that, though resp. received the profits of the business, he did not manage it, but left it in charge of a manager, to whom he had given express instructions not to allow prostitutes to assemble on the premises. Resp. only visited the premises once or twice a week, & there was no evidence that any offence had been committed in his presence or with his knowledge.—Held: having delegated all his authority to the manager & become a mere absentee, he was responsible for the acts of the manager, & was liable to conviction.—ALLEN v. He had never at any time been authorised to sell to or supply customers.—Held: he was not a servant or agent of the employer within Licensing Act, 1921 (c. 42), s. 4 (a), so as to make the employer liable under that sect. for supplying intoxicating liquor otherwise than during the permitted hours.—ADAMS v. xx. Onus on Crown—To prove importation.]—Deft. was arrested, indicted & tried & convicted for harbouring a quantity of dutiable goods, to wit, spirituous liquors unlawfully imported into Canada, of the value of over $200, whereon the duties lawfully payable had not been paid, in violation of Customs Act, Dominion Acts, 1907, c. 11. On the trial the evidence showed that the liquor in question was found in an automobile owned & driven by deft., & some evidence was offered by the Crown indicating unlawful importation. The trial judge instructed the jury that the burden of proof of lawful importation & payment of duty was upon deft., & the Crown was only bound to establish harbouring without lawful excuse.—Held: under the instructions given to them the jury would be likely to place the whole burden upon accused, whereas, under the wording of the statute, the necessity of proof by the Crown of importation was implied, & consequently, there should be a new trial.—R. v. 728 ix. —.]—A resident in a licensed hotel was visited by three friends, who were non-residents. After the permitted hours for the sale or supply of liquor, he ordered & paid for three rounds of drinks, which were consumed by himself & his guests.—Held: the hotelkeeper had supplied the liquor to the resident's guests, & had been guilty of a contravention of Licensing Act, 1921 (c. 42), s. 4 (a).—M'BAIN v. MITCHELL, [1927] S. C. (J.) 57.—SCOT.

xi. —.]—A licensee of a hotel, who was seated on a form outside the hotel, was asked to supply liquor to an unexpected person. He went inside the hotel, came out & handed the liquor to the person, who paid him. There was a light in a room in the hotel described by witnesses as the saloon bar.—Held: an offence had been committed against Licensing Act, 1917, s. 185, & the ct. would take judicial notice of the fact that liquor was kept in a saloon bar.—ALLOHURCH v. HEALEY, [1927] S. A. S. R. 370.—AUS.

xii. — Customer bringing empty bottle—Bottle filled & delivered at customer's house.]—A customer entered a licensed grocer's shop outwith permitted hours & asked for a half-bottle of wine, handing the grocer an empty bottle & the sum of 10d. The grocer put the wine in the bottle & handed it to a message boy in his employment with directions to deliver it at the customer's house. In fact the customer took it from the boy a few yards from the shop.—Held: the transaction was a completed sale of intoxicating liquor in contravention of Licensing Act, 1921, s. 4 (a), & sect. 5 (b) was inapplicable in respect that it applied only to transactions which do not amount to a completed sale.—VALENTINE v. BELL, [1930] S. C. (J.) 51.—SCOT.

W.), s. 57 (1) (b), was a power to name a day during the whole of which licensed premises shall not be open for the sale of liquor & no power was given to direct that, during specified hours of a named day, licensed premises should not be open for the sale of liquor.—DELANEY v. GANT (1927), 40 C. L. R. 174.—AUS.

so. Bye-law prohibiting sale on New Year's day—Sale to bond fide traveller.—A county licensing ct. issued a bye-law that all licensed premises within the district, including inns & hotels, except as regarded travellers & lodgers therein, should be closed wholly on New Year's day, & when New Year's day fell on a Sunday, then on Monday, Jan. 2.—Held: under this bye-law a Monday falling on Jan. 2 must be treated as a Sunday, & accordingly, an hotel-keeper who had supplied a customer on such a Monday, outwith the permitted week-day hours, had not infringed his certificate where the customer was a bond fide traveller who could lawfully have been supplied on Sunday.—HENDERSON v. The evidence for the prosecution was that during prohibited hours two men were seen coming out of deft.'s licensed premises, & that one of them was carrying six bottles of beer, & the other four bottles. No evidence was called by deft., who was convicted.—Held: no inference could be drawn from the evidence before the ct. that the beer in question was disposed of after closing time rather than before; the liquor was presumed to have been lawfully acquired until the contrary was shown, & the conviction should be quashed.—WALSH v. MACKERRAS, [1928] V. L. R. 186; [1928] Argus L. R. 67.—AUS.

755a. — During non-permitted hours.]—Resp., the licensee of a public-house, was found drunk in the kitchen of the premises at 10.30 p.m. during non-permitted hours, the front door being wide open at the time, & he was summoned for being found drunk on licensed premises under Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 12. The justices dismissed the summons on the ground that the time at which resp. was found drunk was after the hours when the sale of intoxicating liquor was permitted:—Held: since at the time in question the premises were open & there was nothing to prevent the sale of food & non-intoxicating liquor at that time, the justices ought to have convicted resp.—

This took place at 8 p.m. while the premises were open for the sale of intoxicating liquor to the public. Summons dismissed as deflt. was in his own home:—Held: deflt. should be convicted, as sect. 18 does not exempt a lodger or a guest residing in the licensed premises.—A.-G. v. FEELY, [1932] I. The prosecutor objected to this fine, on the ground that under sect. 39 of the same Act the justices could not reduce the penalty to a sum less than £6.—Held: the justices had jurisdiction under Finance Act, 1923, s. 13, to impose any penalty not exceeding £500, notwithstanding the fact that Illicit Distillation (Ireland) Act, 1831, s. 39, limited the power of mitigation by prescribing a minimum penalty of £6.—*R. v. S., 1930, of bribing a police officer to permit the briber to sell liquor contrary to said Act is not an offence covered by sect. 157 of the Criminal Code. Sect. 111 is ancillary to the regulation of a matter within provincial jurisdiction &, since it does not, with respect at any rate to said offence, infringe on sect. 157 of the Code, it is not in said respect at least ultra vires.—*R. v. Therefore a taxi driver who with money given him by a customer for that purpose bought liquor from a bootlegger was guilty of unlawfully selling the liquor.—R. (McDOUGALL) v. BALBAR, [1937] 3 W. W. ¶ (p. 107) v. — Purchase of immoderate amount.—Where a person is charged with unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquor for sale, the fact that the accused purchased an immoderate amount of liquor from the government vendor is in itself evidence of an overt act of wrongdoing which the accused is called upon to answer & from which the justice may, under sect. 90 of Government Liquor Act, R. S. B. C., 1924, infer the commission of such an act. The question of what constitutes an immoderate amount of liquor is one of fact depending on all the circumstances of the case.—*R. v. p (p. 110) iii. ———.]—The accused was convicted under Indian Act, R. S. O. 1927, s. 126 (a), for having sold, supplied or given an intoxicant to an Indian. On an application for certiorari it was shown that the magistrate had used the word "liquor" instead of "intoxicant" in reading the charge & that he had refused the accused's request for an adjournment. The accused had previously been charged under the Govt. Liquor Control Act, 1928, c. 31, for an offence alleged to have been committed on the same day. The hearing of this charge had been adjourned, & when Crown counsel had been advised that the Indian Department was laying a charge under the Indian Act he so informed the accused's counsel & that it would be in effect the same charge as that under the Govt. Liquor Control Act & suggested an adjournment of the hearing of the latter charge until the accused was served under the new charge; this suggestion accused's counsel refused to consider.—Held: although the word "liquor" is not defined in the Indian Act its use by the magistrate when reading the charge could not have misled or prejudiced the accused & gave no right to certiorari. The magistrate in refusing the adjournment had not exercised his discretion in any improper manner which would justify the issue of the writ.—BYAK v. R., [1938] 2 W. W. R. 153.—CAN.

The police made a search of his premises, & found 92 bottles of beer, 5 gallons of wine, & a five gallon keg containing wine. He was charged with unlawfully dealing in liquor. Deft. called evidence to show that the beer was the property of one of the boarders who proposed taking it away with him to the country. As to the wine, he stated that some of his boarders preferred wine with their meals rather than tea, & that he supplied it to such boarders without extra charge.—Held*: in the circumstance the wine was kept for sale, & the magistrate should have convicted deft. on the evidence as to the wine even if he accepted deft.'s story about the beer.—*VALE v. On July 26, 1928, an person rented a certain garage, & on the same day the truck in question herein was driven into the garage by R., a hired truckman, & the owner thereof, who locked it therein. The truck, to the knowledge of R., had on it a "still" used or to be used in violation of the Excise Act in the production of spirits, & which truck was used for removing the still from one place to another. On Aug. 1, 1928, the truck was seized by an excise officer, under sect. 95 (2) of the Act, as forfeited. R. pleaded guilty before the Criminal Ct. of illegally having a still in his possession. He was condemned & paid the fine. He contended that a discretion was vested in this ct. to direct the restoration to him of the truck, as being an innocent wrongdoer & already sufficiently penalised.—Held: the truck was legally seized & forfeited & the ct. had no discretion vested in it to remit the penalty.—*R. v. d i. —.]—A wife obtained on Nov. 7, 1928, a decree for judicial separation & costs. The costs were taxed, & execution issued on Feb. 22, 1929, & a return nulla bona made three days later. In the meantime, she had obtained on Jan. 23, 1929, in the same proceedings a decree for permanent alimony, none of which was paid. Her husband had conveyed property to the other deft. herein on Nov. 26, 1928, before the costs were taxed:—Held: the first mentioned decree was a judgment of the Supreme Ct. & the wife was a creditor entitled to invoke the provisions of Fraudulent Conveyances Act, R. S. B. C., 1924 (c. 96), with respect to said conveyance by her husband.—MACKEY v. MACKEY & MAGUR, [1930] 1 W. W. R. 604; 3 D. L. R. 497; 42 B. C. R. 440.—CAN.

129a. Order dismissing action as statute-barred.—Pltf. claimed in 1936 to be indemnified from certain losses, the latest of which accrued to him in 1929, by reason of an agreement made between his predecessor in title & deft. Deft. pleaded that the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action which was not statute-barred & pltf. did not deliver a reply. The master ordered this issue to be tried as a preliminary point of law. With the consent of both parties, the matter was heard by the same master acting as a special referee. He decided that all claims were statute-barred, & dismissed the action. He also refused to allow pltf. to deliver a reply or to have an adjournment. Pltf. appealed to the Divisional Ct., who held that the statement of claim was ambiguous, & did not allege when any cause of action arose; & that the master should not have ordered a trial of the preliminary point, but should have allowed pltf. to deliver a reply. The master's order dismissing the action was set aside, & pltf. given leave to deliver a reply or to amend his statement of claim. The master's order for the trial of the preliminary point was also ordered to be set aside. Deft. appealed to the Ct. of Appeal. Pltf. contended that this was an appeal against a final judgment, & therefore, under Supreme Ct. of Judicature (Amendment) Act, 1935 (c. 2), s. 1 (f), the leave of the Divisional Ct. to appeal was necessary, which leave had been refused:—Held: (1) the order made by the Divisional Ct. was interlocutory, & not final, so that leave to appeal was unnecessary; (2) the statement of claim made it clear that all alleged causes of action arose more than 6 years before the delivery of the writ; (3) the refusal to allow an adjournment was a matter for the master's discretion, which should not be interfered with; (4) the Divisional Ct. had no jurisdiction to deal with the master's order for the trial of the preliminary point as the appeal on this order lay to a judge in chambers.—*KRONSTEIN v. - 198a. — Must enforce private right.]—What weighs with me in the matter is that the right in question which pltf. seeks to have set up by a declaratory order is not a private right at all. Pltf. has no personal right to have sewers kept in proper condition. It is a matter, as LORD HALSBURY says, for the whole district; it is a matter committed to the special jurisdiction of a department which is a Government department, who have to act, not with regard to the interests of any particular individual, but with regard to the interests of the district generally. I am not aware that any ct. has ever in such a case made a declaration at the suit of a member of the public, & still less in a case where, as I have said, I am not satisfied that any real principle of justice requires the ct. to determine the matter (MAUGHAM, J.).—CLARK v. C., Ord. 54A, r. 1A, to which the A.-G., as representing the public, was made def., to determine whether the Board, as trustees for the purposes of putting into execution the Carnarvon Harbour Acts, 1793 to 1903, had all the powers conferred by Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 29, on a tenant for life & on the trustees of a settlement, & could exercise the powers of sale & leasing thereby conferred, without regard to the provisions as to advertisement & public auction contained in sect. 24 of Carnarvon Harbour Act, 1809, as amended by the Pier & Harbour Orders Confirmation Act, 1877 (No. 3). They had at no time so purported to exercise the powers in question :—Held : no particular exercise of any power being called in question, the ct. should not entertain the application. If the trustees of the Board were to purport to exercise any particular power, the A.-G. would have a discretion whether or not to intervene, & an individual claiming to be aggrieved by the purported exercise of the power might have a right of action without the intervention of the A.-G. The making of a declaration might fetter the A.-G. in the exercise of his discretion, & the declaration might not be binding upon an individual claiming to be aggrieved by the purported exercise of a particular power, or, if it were, it might well be a cause of grievance to a person who desired to bring proceedings himself.—Re CARNARVON HARBOUR ACTS, 1793 to 1903, THOMAS v. The contract was, in fact, secured, & defts. admitted that pltf. had rendered some assistance "in or about the negotiation of the said contract." Defts. further admitted that as consideration for the securing of the contract pltf. was entitled to receive reasonable remuneration in respect of his services, but that such remuneration would not become payable until after the contract had become operative & payments thereunder had been made by the Roumanian firm to defts. Pltf. claimed a declaration as to his rights in respect of commission :—Held : this was a proper case for a declaratory judgment.—JACOBS v. - 219a. —.—]—The male deft. owned two fields in which were a number of vehicles with structures on them or structures on wheels which had been vehicles, owned by his wife, the other deft., & let by the male deft. to persons who resided in them. Pltf. council brought an action in the King's Bench Div. against defts. claiming (only) a declaration that these structures were "temporary buildings" within Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (c. 53), s. 27. The trial judge made that declaration. On appeal it was contended for defts. (a) that there being a remedy provided by sects. 6 & 27 of the Act by which pltf. council could sue for penalties in a summary manner, there was no jurisdiction in the High Ct. to grant the declaration; & (b) that as the council had not claimed an injunction & could not have claimed an injunction, which is a remedy for the protection of personal and proprietary rights, & as there was no actual dispute between the parties, there was no jurisdiction in the High Ct. to grant the declaration:—Held: (1) this case was distinguishable from Barracough v. Brown, No. 222. In that case it was decided that where a statute gave a right to recover expenses in a ct. of summary jurisdiction from a person who was not otherwise liable, pltf. had no right to sue for these expenses in the High Ct. In the present case by sect. 27 (4) of the Act of 1907 pltf. council had a right to pull down or remove these structures if they were "temporary buildings" within the sect. without reference to any ct., & there was jurisdiction in the High Ct. to grant the council the declaration for which they asked:—Held: (2) since Guaranty Trust Company of New York v. Hannay & Co., No. 219, & Russian Commercial & Industrial Bank v. British Bank for Foreign Trade, Ltd., No. 199, R. S. C., Ord. 25, r. 5, is shown to be intra vires, & the language of that rule must be read in its natural & ordinary meaning. so. Of bye-law.—Although sect. 62 (8) of King's Bench Act, 1931, provides that the ct. may make binding declarations of right whether or not any consequential relief is or could be claimed, yet it does not follow that an action will lie for merely a declaration that a certain municipal bye-law is invalid when pltf. has nothing more than a general or political or public interest in the bye-law; he must be shown to have such a personal interest therein as affects or reasonably may affect him with respect to his rights as to status, person or property.—JOHANSON v. q ii.—In an action against the trustee for the creditors of a merchant, for damages for the alleged wrongful conversion of flour & cereals which pltf. had consigned to the merchant for sale on pltf.'s behalf, pltf. contended that a declaration was necessary for their future protection in their relationship with others who might become trustees for creditors.—Held: the declaration should not be made, it being sufficient to determine the rights of the parties in the present case.—LAKE OF THE WOODS MILLING CO., LTD., & SPILLERS' CANADIAN MILLING CO., LTD. v. sd. Declaratory Judgments Act, 1908—Discretion of court—Anticipatory construction.—The jurisdiction of the ct. to give or make a declaratory judgment or order under sect. 3 of the above Act is discretionary, & the ct. will not give or make such judgment or order by way of anticipatory interpretation or construction of statutory powers in the abstract, without knowledge of the facts & circumstances under which such powers might be exercised, or without any certitude that many of the powers will ever be exercised. Neither will the ct. exercise its discretion to give or make any judgment or order on a question of construction which, whichever way it is decided, does not necessarily put an end to the litigation.—DAIRY PROPRIETARY ASSOCN. (INC.) v. NEW ZEALAND DAIRY PRODUCT CONTROL BOARD, [1936] N. Z. L. R. 535.—N.Z.

PART VIII.

274 iii. —.—Under Land Registry Act, R. S. B. C., 1924, the question of priority as between an applicant to register a mtge. & a registered judgment creditor is not settled by the mere fact of the prior registration of the judgment. A mtgee. can, if the facts warrant it, secure registration in priority to a judgment registered after the execution of the mtge.—GREGG v. PALMER, [1932] 2 W. W. R. 161.—CAN.

S. R. (2 Thom.) 1.—CAN.

ci.—Subsequent death of debtor insolvent—Right to issue execution against representative.—Where a judgment has been duly recorded in the lifetime of a deceased party, & his estate has been declared insolvent by the Probate Ct., an execution may nevertheless be issued on such judgment, on a proper suggestion of the facts on the record, against his exor. or administrator, but can be extended only on the land bound by such judgment.—BURROWS v. ISNOR, Cong. Dig. 670.—CAN.

PART IX. SECT. 5.

sg. Unsatisfied judgment—Collateral remedies unaffected.—A judgment until it is satisfied is but a security for the particular cause of action in which it is recovered, & until then does not operate to affect any collateral concurrent remedy which the creditor may have.—COMMERCIAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA v. CADENHEAD, [1931] 3 W. W. R. 653.—CAN.

PART IX. SECT. 6.

336 i. Effect of covenant to pay interest—Mortgage.—By a mtge. the mtgor. covenanted, by a separate covenant, to pay interest. The mtgee. obtained judgment against the mtgor. for the principal & interest due.—Held: the security of the mtge. was not merged in the judgment.—LOWRY v. WILLIAMS, [1895] 1 I. R.

To get rid of the last question at once it seems to be plain, having regard to Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 3, that the matter is one in my discretion. That being so, this is a case in which I am not disposed to give interest to either side; it is not, I think, a case in which there should be payment of any interest (FARWELL, J.).—*TEES CONSERVANCY COMRS. v. The cause of action arose partly, at least, in Ontario. He did not appear, & judgment was entered against him by default. sa. From date of order.]—Plffs. brought an action to recover a liquidated sum. Deft. defended the action, & delivered a counterclaim. A consent was entered into between the parties, by which it was provided that all proceedings in the action should be stayed upon certain terms. By these terms deft. agreed to pay to plffs. a certain sum by instalments, & if the instalments should be in arrear for more than seven days, the balance then due should immediately become payable by deft. Deft. was to withdraw his counterclaim, & the consent was to be made a rule of ct. An order was subsequently made staying the action on these terms. Default having been made by deft. in the payment of the instalments, a writ of fi. fa. was issued, directing the sheriff to levy execution on the goods of deft. for a certain sum, which included the balance then due & interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the said order of the ct. Deft. applied for an injunction to restrain the sheriff from acting under the fi. fa.:—Held: since the order of the ct. was one for the payment of a sum of money, it followed that interest was leviable at 4 per cent. per annum, & that it ran from the date of the order. Accordingly the amount for which the fi. fa. was issued was correct, & the sheriff could not be restrained by injunction from levying execution.—*FARBENBLOOM v. ## Part XVII.—Judicial Decisions as Authorities.

498a. ———.—]—(1) When any tribunal is bound by the judgment of another ct., either superior or co-ordinate, it is bound by the judgment itself, & if from the opinions delivered it is clear what the ratio decidendi was which led to the judgment, then that ratio decidendi is also binding. But if it is not clear, then it is not part of the tribunal's duty to spell out with great difficulty a ratio decidendi in order to be bound by it.

(2) If a decision of the House of Lords rests upon the special & peculiar circumstances of the case, the case does not bind the House, or any ct., by a general principle; but if the decision rests upon a general doctrine, it binds all cts. & the House, & that doctrine is part of the law of the land until the legislature be moved to interfere.—GREAT WESTERN RY. Co. v. MOSTYN (OWNERS), THE MOSTYN, [1928] A. C. 57; 97 L. J. P. 8; 138 L. T. 403; 92 J. P. 18; 44 T. L. R. 179; 26 L.G. R. 91; 17 Asp. M. L. C. 367, H. L.

501a. ———.—]—Not decision of fact.]—A decision of fact in one case cannot bind a judge who has to decide a similar question of fact in another (TALBOT, J.).—WILLIAMS-ELLIS v. COBB, [1935] 1 K. 508a. ———.—]—It is the duty of a judge to ascertain the construction of the instrument before him, & not to refer to the construction put by another judge upon an instrument, perhaps similar, but not the same. The only result of referring to authorities for that purpose is confusion & error, in this way, that if you look at a similar instrument, & say that a certain construction was put upon it, & that it differs only to such a slight degree from the document before you, that you do not think the difference sufficient to alter the construction, you miss the real point of the case, which is to ascertain the meaning of the instrument before you. It may be quite true that in your opinion the difference between the two instruments is not sufficient to alter the construction, but at the same time the judge who decided on that other instrument may have thought that that very difference would be sufficient to alter the interpretation of that instrument. You have, in fact, no guide whatever; & the result, especially in some cases of wills, has been remarkable. There is, first, document A., & a judge formed an opinion as to its construction. Then came document B., & some other judge has said that it differs very little from the document A., not sufficiently to alter the construction, therefore, he construes it in the same way. Then comes document C., & the judge there compares it with document B., & says it differs very little, & therefore, he shall construe it in the same way; & so the construction has gone on until we find a document which is in totally different terms from the first, & which no human being would think of construing in the same manner, but which has by this process come to be construed in this manner (JESSEL, M.R.).—ASPDEN v. SEDDON (1874), 10 Ch. App. 396, n.; 44 L. J. Ch. 361, n.; 31 L. T. 626; on appeal (1875), 10 Ch. App. 394, L. JJ.

506b. Cases decided on demurrer.]—Todd v. Flight, 9 C. B. N. S. 377, was decided on demurrer; that is to say, if statements in the declaration were true, did they give a right of action against deft.? And cases decided on demurrer in that way are not authorities for what would be the case if there were other statements in the declaration. They are authorities on the question, statements in the declaration being taken as true: Do they give a cause of action? (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—ST. ANNE'S WELL BREWERY Co. v. ROBERTS (1928), 140 L. 508a. ———.—]—Two reasons were given by all the members of the Ct. of Appeal for their decision & we are not entitled to pick out the first reason as the ratio decidendi & neglect the second, or to pick out the second reason as the ratio decidendi & neglect the first; we must take both as forming the ground of the judgment (GREER, L.J.).—*LONDON JEWELLERS, LTD. v. 517b. — Obiter dicta.—It is of course perfectly familiar doctrine that obiter dicta, though they may have great weight as such, are not conclusive authority. Obiter dicta in this context means what the words literally signify—namely, statements by the way. If a judge thinks it desirable to give his opinion on some point which is not necessary for the decision of the case, that of course has not the binding weight of the decision of the case & the reasons for the decision (TALBOT, J.).—*FLOWER v. 526a. —.]—Great importance is to be attached to old authorities, on the strength of which many transactions may have been adjusted & rights determined. But where they are plainly wrong, & especially where the subsequent course of judicial decisions has disclosed weakness in the reasoning on which they were based, & practical injustice in the consequences that must flow from them, I consider it is the duty of this House to overrule them, if it has not lost the right to do so by itself expressly affirming them. Original panel inadequate—Power of judge to add to.—Deft. was arrested, indicted & tried & convicted for harbouring a quantity of dutiable goods, to wit, spirituous liquors unlawfully imported into Canada, of the value of over $200, whereon the duties lawfully payable had not been paid, in violation of Customs Act, Dominion Acts, 1907, c. 11. On the trial a number of jurors, previously summoned, were absent, & others were excused from serving & a new panel was summoned. The original panel was not discharged, but the names on both panels were thrown into one box, & the jury, impanelled for deft.'s trial, drawn from the names as so combined:—Held: the effect of the legislation Acts of 1919, c. 7, s. 41, was to give the trial judge authority to retain the panel summoned, & to increase the number by additions thereto, & the objection to the composition of the jury drawn for deft.'s trial failed.—*R. v. The clerk of the ct. summoned a jury, but not in the manner prescribed by the Act. Deft. objected & the judge disposed of the difficulty by calling a jury from the body of the ct. The action was tried by the jury thus formed & judgment was entered for pltf. upon the jury's verdict:—Held: the judge had no power to deprive either party of the right to have a trial by a jury qualified & summoned according to the strict requirements of the Act.—*FOLEY v. 304a. ——— Whether ground for new trial.]—In an action for libel pltf. set out in his statement of claim the alleged libel, & in a separate paragraph alleged an innuendo which practically repeated, but somewhat extended, the statements in the alleged libel. Defts. did not plead justification or fair comment, but paid 20s. into ct. in respect of the alleged libel as sufficient damages; they made no payment into ct. in respect of the innuendo; & they gave notice under R. S. C., Ord. 36, r. 37, of their intention to give in evidence certain matters in mitigation of damages. At the trial pltf. gave evidence that save for one lapse he was a man of unblemished reputation. Thereupon he was cross-examined as to specific incidents not mentioned in the libel or in the particulars served under R. S. C., Ord. 36, r. 37, it being suggested that he was a man of bad reputation. This line of cross-examination was objected to, but was allowed. Before the conclusion of the cross-examination the jury intervened with an intimation that they desired to find for the defts., which they then did without any summing up. On appeal :—Held : (1) the cross-examination was admissible as cross-examination to credit, but if the incidents were denied by pltf. no further evidence could be called to rebut pltf.'s denials, & the jury should have been told that while they were not bound to accept pltf.'s denials, those denials, though unaccepted, afforded no evidence that the incidents had taken place; (2) the cross-examination was not admissible to mitigate damages, & the jury ought to have been directed to this effect; (3) the jury should have been told that their intervention was premature, & they must hear the pltf.'s case to the end & be directed as to the issues they had to try; & (4) the trial having been in those respects unsatisfactory, there must be a new trial.

(5) Communications from the jury to the judge should be shown to the parties' counsel (per SCRUTTON, L. J.).

While the better practice is for communications from the jury to be shown to parties' counsel, the question whether they should be shown or not is one for the discretion of the judge (per SANKEY, L. J.).—HOBBS v. TINLING, HOBBS v. NOTTINGHAM JOURNAL, [1929] 2 K. B. 1; 98 L. J. K. B. 421; 141 L. T. 121; 45 T. L. R. 328; 73 Sol. Jo. 220, C. A.

The learned judge thereupon directed them that in the interests of the parties, it was their duty to do their utmost to reach agreement. & if the minority could, without doing violence to a reasoned conviction, give way to the majority, they ought to do so :—Held : this was a proper direction, as it did not amount to a direction that the minority should, without being convinced at all, & without any real conversion, surrender their own judgment & agree with the majority.—In the Estate of WRIGHT, LAMBERT v. WOODHAM, [1936] 1 All E. R. 877, C. A.

412a. Continuance with eleven—Necessity for assent in writing.]—It is important that the requirement of Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (c. 86), s. 15, with regard to the necessary assent being given in writing should be strictly observed. Where, however, counsel for the Crown & counsel for the prisoner, after consultation with the prisoner, had both verbally agreed to the trial proceeding with eleven jurors :—Held : in the circumstances of the particular case, there had been no miscarriage of justice & the conviction was not invalidated by absence of consent in writing.—*R. v. If he is personally acquainted with any material fact, he should submit to be sworn as to it :—Held : where a matter in dispute depended upon the condition of things existing at a certain locality, it was an improper & irregular proceeding for some of the jurymen to visit the locality privately, & a direction to the jury that they were entitled to take into consideration what might be told to them by any of their fellows as to what they had seen & observed for

It subsequently transpired that at the trial one of the jury did not understand English, the language in which some of the evidence, counsel's addresses, & the judge's charge were given:—Held: the convictions & sentences must be set aside on the grounds that the effect of the incompetence of the juror was to deny to the accused persons an essential part of g i. — — —.—The power given a trial judge by King's Bench Act, R. S. S., 1920 (c. 39), s. 47 (1), to dispense with a jury, although a jury has been claimed by one of the parties, is one which should be exercised with judicial discretion, i.e., the judge must give some good reason for depriving the party of his right to a jury.—*BLOOMART v. g ii. — Issue left to jury immaterial.—In an action against a police officer for assault & battery, malicious prosecution & malicious arrest, the trial judge dispensed with the jury in the trial of the claim for assault & battery. He also ruled that in the trial of the claim for malicious prosecution it was his duty under Jud. Act, R. S. O. 1914, c. 58, s. 62, to decide all questions both of law & fact as to the existence of reasonable & probable cause; & he said that the jury would be called upon to try only the issues as to malice & damages. A jury was then called & sworn & the trial proceeded. The evidence being closed, & the jury having retired, the trial judge gave judgment, dismissing the claim for assault, & finding that there was reasonable & probable cause for the prosecution. He also held, on the facts, as a matter of law, that there was no foundation for the claim for malicious arrest. He, therefore, dismissed the whole action & discharged the jury:—Held: having regard to Jud. Act, R. S. O. 1927, c. 88, ss. 54–57, 63, the trial judge had a discretion to dispense with the jury, & his discretion was properly exercised.—OWENS v. MARTINDALE, [1928] 4 D. L. R. 932; 63 O. L. R. 87.—CAN.

PART VII. SECT. 13, SUB-SECT. 1.

461 i. Verdict must be unanimous.—Trial by jury is a fundamental right of the subject & not a matter of mere procedure, & unanimity in the jury's verdict upon the trial of criminal issues is an essential part of that right. Statutes affecting trial by jury are to be construed strictly. Jury Act, 1936 (Tasmania), provides that, on the trial of criminal issues, the decision of ten jurors shall in certain circumstances be taken as the verdict of the jury:—Held: the Act must be construed as referring only to the trial of issues joined after its enactment, & not to trial thereafter of issues joined before.—*NEWELL v. 644a. ———.—The Master or the judge in Chambers has power under the Rules to order a cause, which is not a commercial cause, to be tried in London with a City of London special jury.

The practice which has arisen, since the decision of SCRUTTON, J., in Barnes v. Lawson (1911), 16 Com. Cas. 74; 30 Digest 261, 644, that in all actions, including those which are not commercial causes, where notice has been given for trial with a City of London special jury, of applying to the judge in charge of the Commercial List to transfer the action to the Commercial List with the object of ordering trial of the action with a London special jury, is not justified by the Judicature Act or by the Rules made under the Judicature Act.

79a. Authorised improvements—Improvements executed before Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18).—(1) A tenant for life of certain settled estates had expended on the settled property large sums of money for improvements, repairs & other works. Among the items of expenditure so incurred were certain electric light installations to the mansion house & the erection of batteries. These particular works had been carried out before the coming into force of above Act, & were therefore not "authorised improvements" under Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, for which the ct. could have granted repayment to the tenant for life out of capital, although under the new Act of 1925 they would be "authorised improvements." On an application by the tenant for life to be recouped out of capital these sums so expended by him :—Held : notwithstanding the fact that these works were executed prior to above Act, there was, under the new Act, jurisdiction in the ct., if it thought fit, to order repayment of these sums to the tenant for life out of capital moneys ; & consequently as these particular items were "authorised improvements" under above Act, they could be repayable out of capital, notwithstanding the fact that they were incurred on works executed before Jan. 1. 1926. Having regard, however, to the fact that certain of the works had been carried out several years previously, there would have to be a rebate to allow for a diminished value.

(2) The tenant for life having further claimed that he should be repaid a proportion of the proceeds of sale of a part of the settled land, for tenant right valuation, on the ground that by his careful management before the sale he had enhanced its value :—Held : such a claim was really one to be repaid out of capital moneys, for an improvement not within Settled Land Acts, & the ct. had no jurisdiction to allow it.—Re SHERBORNE'S (LORD) SETTLED ESTATE, [1929] 1 Ch. 345 ; 98 L. Effect of sale of land.—A tenant for life of settled property comprising a mansion house & land carried out in 1920 improvements not all of which were authorised by Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890.

He did not submit, as required by the Act of 1882, a scheme for approval by the Settled Land Act trustees or by the ct. ; & he paid for the improvements himself. In 1923 he sold most of the land, & in 1929 he sold the remainder of the land & the mansion house. On a summons by him asking (inter alia) that, pursuant to Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 87, the trustees might be directed or authorised to raise out of the capital moneys comprised in the settlement & to pay to him the costs of improvements authorised by the Settled Land Acts & executed at the cost of the tenant for life, notwithstanding that a scheme was not, before the execution of the improvements, submitted for approval, as required by the Settled Land Act, 1882, to the trustees of the settlement or the ct. :—Held : (1) the ct. could authorise recoupment of the expenditure by the tenant for life on the settled land incurred before 1926, in so far as it was expenditure on "improvements" within Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18) ; (2) having regard to Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), ss. 84, 87, the sale of the property did not terminate the ct.'s jurisdiction to order repayment ; (3) as the appct. must at the time have expected himself to pay the sums spent on improvements which after 1925 came within Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), Sched. III., Part 2, the jurisdiction ought not to be exercised.—Re BOROUGH COURT ESTATE, [1932] 2 Ch. 39 ; 101 L. J. Ch. 316 ; 147 L. T. 476 ; 75 Sol. Jo. 830.

The cost of the installation was paid by the tenant for life out of his own money. The tenant for life now asked the ct. to authorise the trustees of the settlement to apply out of capital moneys the cost of the installation, the amount of such cost to be repaid to them out of the income of the settled land in fifteen years from the date of the order in half-yearly instalments :—Held : the improvement being one that would have had to be made sooner or later, the order asked for should be made, repayment to be made by twenty half-yearly instalments, whereof the first must be regarded as having fallen due on June 30, 1920.—Re JACQUES SETTLED ESTATES, [1930] 2 Ch. 418; 99 L. J. Ch. 534; 144 L. T. 103.

"Structural additions."—The tenant for life of a settled estate erected a range of buildings, consisting of garage, chauffeur's flat, workshop, engine-room, battery-room, tool shed, boiler-house, potting shed & green-houses, at a short distance in rear of the principal house on the estate, which he was improving for the purpose of personal occupation :—Held : these were "structural additions to . . . buildings" within Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), Sched. III., Part II., para. (v), & therefore improvements the cost of which could be defrayed out of capital money. The test was not whether the structural addition was physically attached to the principal house, but whether it formed with the principal house a whole or unit.—Re INSOLE'S SETTLED ESTATE, [1938] Ch.

147a. —Principal house let—Smaller house used by tenant for life.—The tenant for life of a settled estate was for financial reasons unwilling to retain as the principal mansion house a very large house with ten reception rooms & fifty-two bedrooms. The house had in fact been let, & was now let for a long term as a school. The tenant for life had at considerable expense adapted another house on the estate as a residence for himself, expending over £13,000 in making alterations, including drainage work & the installation of electric light. It was contended that the latter house had become the principal mansion house within Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18) :—Held : the question whether or not a particular house is the principal mansion house is a question of fact, & in the circumstances, the first house had ceased to be, & the second house had become, the principal mansion house of the estate.—Re FEVERSHAM SETTLED ESTATE, [1938] 2 All E. The lessee of premises created a yearly tenancy under which pltf. became tenant & occupier of the premises. On the same day the lessee mtgd. the premises by way of sub-demise without obtaining the permission of the lessor. The lease contained a covenant not to assign, underlet, or part with the possession of the premises without the consent in writing of the lessor, & a clause providing for re-entry upon breach of any of the covenants. The lessee, who had been adjudicated bkpt., failing to pay the interest, the mtgees. appointed a receiver, to whom pltf. paid a quarter's rent due at the following Midsummer. Before the next quarterly rent became due the lessor issued a writ to recover possession of the premises; but the writ, which was served on the pltf. (as occupier) & others, did not contain a statement of the ground of forfeiture. Pltf. after appearance in that action, but before delivery of statement of claim specifying the cause of forfeiture, paid the rent falling due at Michaelmas to the receiver. He refused to pay the rent falling due at Christmas, & the receiver, under the powers given by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, distrained. In an action by pltf. against the receiver for a wrongful distress:—Held: the payment of rent to the receiver by pltf., after the service upon him of the writ to recover possession of the premises, did not estop him from showing, on a claim for subsequent rent, that the title of the mtgees. had determined, inasmuch as the mtgees. were not misled by the payment.—*SERJEANT v. B. made an assignment under Bkpcy. Act, by virtue whereof the term created by the lease & transfer became vested in the trustee, who did not elect to retain the premises or to disclaim:—Held: the effect of the transfer, lease, & guarantee was to establish the relation of lessor & lessee between O. & B.—*OLIVIER v. C., 1924, inasmuch as it has not "for its object the acquisition of gain," is incapable of making a lease; the appellate ct. erred in holding that applt. was estopped from setting up incapacity of the alleged landlords on the ground that to do so would be tantamount to impeaching the title to the premises of the persons by whom it was let into possession of them as tenant. To extend the estoppel, which exists where the relationship of landlord & tenant is admitted or established, & which prevents the tenant questioning the landlord's title, so as to make it apply to a case in which the real question is as to the existence of that relationship, seems to be wrong in principle & is quite unwarranted by the authorities.—*CANADA MORNING NEWS CO. v. - 370a. — Agreement "subject to the terms of a lease."—*Deft. employed house agents to let shop premises at 155, High Street, Bromley, Kent, & on Dec. 9, 1930, pltf., after inspecting the premises, offered to take a lease. In reply the house agents wrote to him on the same day: "Corner shop, 155, High Street, Bromley. Referring to our conversation this morning on the telephone, we confirm that, subject to the terms of a lease, our client is prepared to accept your offer to take the above premises on a 7, 14 or 21 years' lease at a rent of £350 per annum for the first 14 years, rising to £375 for the last 7 years. . . . We have instructed Mr. Bromley's solrs. to put the draft lease in hand immediately to forward to your solrs. . . ." The draft lease was forwarded on the same day, & after negotiations as to its terms deft.'s solrs. wrote on Dec. 29, 1930, to pltf.'s solrs.: "We have now received our client's instructions on the draft lease, & he is prepared to accept your client's alterations. We are, therefore, having the lease engrossed, & will forward you a counterpart for execution by your client in due course." This was done, but deft. then refused to execute the lease, & on Jan. 24, 1931, granted a lease of the premises to some one else. On Feb. 3, 1931, pltf. commenced proceedings for specific performance, or, alternatively, damages:—Held: there was no binding contract to grant a lease, as the expression "subject to the terms of a lease" in the letter of Dec. 9, 1930, meant "subject to the terms to be contained in a lease executed by the lessor." It followed that even if deft.'s solrs. were the agents of deft. to communicate by their letter of Dec. 29, 1930, the fact that deft. had himself agreed to the terms of the lease, so that this letter was a sufficient memorandum of the agreement signed by the deft.'s duly authorised agents within Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40, there was no binding contract, because the result of the letter of Dec. 9, 1930, was that there could be no concluded agreement until the lease had been executed.—RAINGOLD v. GEORGE, [1933] 3 W. W. R. 399; 4 D. L. R. 658.—CAN.

PART I. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 3.

sd. Lease by life tenant to reversioner—Until death of lessor.—A lease by a life tenant for a term certain to the reversioner, containing a covenant by the lessee to pay rent to the lessor, "her heirs & assigns," does not estop the lessee from showing that he has become owner on the lessor's death.—THATCHER v. BOWMAN (1889), 18 O. R. 265.—CAN.

PART II. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.

337 vi. —.]—Land Titles Act, R. S. S., 1930, s. 99 (b), provides that there is an implied covenant by a lessee to keep & yield up the demised land in good & tenantable repair, "accidents & damage to buildings from fire, storm, or tempest or other casualty & reasonable wear & tear excepted":—Held: the words "or other casualty" are not restricted to a casualty of the same nature as fire, storm, or tempest, but mean any unforeseen & unavoidable occurrence as distinguished from a happening which could have been avoided. Also, the word "fire," because of its conjunction with the words preceding & following it, must be limited to such fires as are purely accidental, with the result that, with respect at least to a tenant for a term of years, sub-sect. (b) has not made any change in his liability for fires, it being still governed by Statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3, c. 23, s. 2, as limited by 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 86, which provides in effect that no person is liable for any fire accidentally begun.—ROBERTS v. MOMANNIS, [1935]

1 W. W. R. 193.—CAN.

337 vii. —.]—14 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 86, which is in force in Saskatchewan, protects a tenant from liability for damage to the leased premises caused by fire therein only in the case of "accidental" fire, i.e. a fire not due to his negligence or wilful act. Damage to leased premises caused by a fire resulting from a tenant's positive act, either wilful or negligent, is voluntary waste. Damage caused by his failure to take precaution to prevent a fire is permissive waste. The fact that a landlord has agreed with his tenant to insure the demised building against fire & has not done so does not disentitle him to recover damages he may otherwise be entitled to for negligence of the tenant resulting in the burning of the building, nor does the fact that the tenant believed the landlord had insured the building raise any estoppel against the landlord in such an action.—CHERRY v. SMITH, [1933] 1 W. W. R. 305.—CAN.

engrossment of the lease for his signature, & saying they had written to the lessee & expected to exchange parts shortly. By mistake the engrossment of the counterpart was enclosed to the lessor's solr., & the engrossment of the lease to the lessee, who subsequently delivered it to the lessor's solr.'s messenger in exchange for the engrossment of the counterpart. Shortly after this the lessee, relying (inter alia) on Stat. Frauds, repudiated the oral contract:—Held: the lessee's solrs.' letter purporting to enclose the engrossment of the lease coupled with that engrossment, subsequently handed over by the lessee in person, constituted a sufficient memorandum of the oral contract.—HORNER v. WALKER, [1923] 2 Ch. 218; 92 L. J. Ch. 573; 129 L. T. 782.

Def. entered into possession, & subsequently, with pltf.'s consent, assigned his interest in the agreement & premises. Before the expiration of the term pltf. commenced an action against deft. for rent, the action being heard after the expiration of the seven years provided for by the agreement:—Held: specific performance of the agreement could have been granted & the action was therefore maintainable.—*GILBEY v. 487a. —. —.]—Under an oral agreement, in 1913, applt. leased to resp. a small piece of land in India. It was intended in due course to execute a lease in writing for five years, renewable every five years, & in anticipation thereof resp. erected substantial structures on the leased land. No lease was, in fact, ever executed. In 1922 applt. served notice to quit upon resp., asserting that resp. was a monthly tenant; & in 1923 a suit for possession of the land was instituted by applt. It was established that in 1918 resp. had notice that applt. refused to perform the terms of the oral agreement of 1913:—Held: the acts of resp. were all referable to the oral contract of 1913 which was enforceable against applt. for a certain time, but resp. had allowed his right to enforce that contract to become statute-barred.—*ARIFF v. PART II. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.—D.

417 i. Tenant—Sufficiency of identification.]—In an action for specific performance of an agreement for a lease the memorandum relied on by pltf. as satisfying sect. 4 of Statute of Frauds, R. S. B. C. 1936, was a letter addressed to deft. by real estate agents, in which they said, inter alia, "We are authorised on behalf of a client to make you the following offer. . . . The premises will be used by the Lessee as a Restaurant. . . . We enclose herewith our cheque for $100.00 as a deposit . . . to be applied on account of the first month's rent." Def. contended that the proposed lessee was not sufficiently identified by the letter:—Held: the proposed lessee was so described that his identity could not be fairly disputed, & therefore, the statute was satisfied.—*LITRAS v. resist ejectment only if the case could be brought within the range of one or other of those principles of equity which have been held to apply to this country.—ARIFF v. JADUNATH MAJUMDAR (1928), 1 L. R. 55 Cal. 1090.—IND.

st. Valuation of furniture.]—WALKER v. KELLY (1874), 24 O. P. 174.—CAN.

A landlord leased a flat for a rent of £450 per annum, & at the same time contracted in writing with the tenant for the provision of certain services at an annual payment of £750—£1,200 in all. The services under the contract were substantially the same as those already provided for under the lease. Although the actual terms of the two documents were not illegal, immoral or contrary to public policy, their execution was alleged to have been obtained by the landlord for the purpose of defrauding a valuation authority, by deceiving them as to the true rateable value of the premises, & by inducing them to believe that the true rent received by the landlord in respect of the premises was £450, & by concealing from them the terms of the contract:—Held: if this were true, the landlord could not seek the assistance of the ct. to obtain either rent under the lease or payments under the contract. Although the hypothesis might be that the intention of the landlord was to use the two documents, & not their subject-matter, the flat, for an unlawful purpose, the principle applicable was the same.—ALEXANDER v. RAYSON, [1936] 1 K. B. 169; 105 L. J. K. B. 148; 154 L. T. 205; 52 T. L. R. 131; 80 Sol. Jo. 15, C. A.

purposes contemplated.—A fishery co. were the tenants of salmon fishings under a lease for nineteen fishing seasons. During the currency of the lease, the President of the Air Council, acting under statutory powers, made bye-laws converting the greater part of the area occupied by the fishings into a danger zone for the purposes of aerial gunnery & bombing practice. The bye-laws provided that practice would take place within the zone four days a week throughout the year, & that, during practice, no person might enter the zone, or bring thereon any vehicle, animal, vessel, aircraft or thing, & penalties were imposed for contraventions of the bye-laws. The effect of a due observance of these bye-laws would be to render the fishings incapable of possession for the purposes of the lease, & although bombing & firing practice had taken place only on a portion of the days reserved, the fishery co. had not attempted, since the bye-laws were promulgated, to exercise their right of fishing. In an action by the fishery co. against their landlord for declarator that they were entitled to abandon the lease:—Held: as the effect of the bye-laws was to cause total eviction from the fishings, the landlord could no longer maintain the pursuers in possession of the subjects of the lease, as he was bound to do, & accordingly, pursuers were entitled to abandon the lease.—*TAY SALMON CO. v. f 1. —.—A printed form of lease contained the following covenant: " & the said lessee for heirs, exors., administrators & assigns hereby covenant with the said lessor heirs & assigns to pay rent & to pay taxes & to repair." A notary public who completed the form in typewriting on oral instructions from two of three lessees typewrote "their" in the first space & "his" in the second space. The lease so prepared but unexecuted was taken by defts. to pltf., & on his saying that he wanted it signed before his solr., they went to the latter's office. The solr. made a number of interpolations in ink in the type-written parts of the lease. These defts. said, were read & explained by the solr. to them. The lease, which is under seal, was then executed. The lessor sued for, inter alia, breach of covenant to pay taxes, the taxes having been paid by him for the demised period. Defts. pleaded that the words " & to pay taxes " had been left in the lease by mistake, that pltf. never suggested or requested defts. to pay taxes until notice to terminate the lease had been given him, & they asked that the lease be rectified by striking out said words:—Held: the lease should be rectified.—*PALLONE v. 1526a. — Underlessee of sub-term in mortgaged premises—Covenant for further assurance in mortgage—Underlessee entitled to conveyance of legal estate—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), Sched. I., Part II., paras. 3, 6 (d).—A. in 1926 had become entitled to a sub-term in certain mortgaged leasehold premises acquired by purchase by a predecessor in title from a mtgee. The original mtge. was made in 1848, & contained a covenant by the then mtgor. with the then mtgee. his exors. administrators & assigns (inter alia) for further assurance of the nominal reversion in the three outstanding days in the head lease, thereby mortgaged, if required. In the head lease were certain covenants by the lessee for repair of the premises. The freehold of the demised property ultimately became absolutely vested in pltf. for an estate in fee simple. A. had gone into possession of the mtgd. premises, but relinquished such possession before the trial of the action. Pltf. alleged that there had been a breach of the covenant to repair contained in the head lease & claimed (inter alia) damages against A. It appeared that the nominal reversion in the head lease had never been got in by any one, & A. denied that, as there was no privity of estate between him & pltf., he could be held liable under the repairing covenant contained in the head lease. It was alleged, however, by pltf., that having regard to the fact that A., by reason of the covenant for further assurance contained in the mtge., was a person "entitled to require a legal estate to be conveyed to or otherwise vested in him" under Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), Sched. I., Part II., para. 3, such legal estate, namely, the nominal reversion, vested in him by Sched. II., Part II., para. 6 (d), & rendered him liable on the repairing covenants contained in the head lease:—Held: on the facts of the case, A. was liable by reason of the operation of Sched. I., Part II., paras. 3 & 6 (d), as a person entitled to require a legal estate to be conveyed to or otherwise vested in him; & further, that he had not availed himself of the provisions of the Sched. to the Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1926 (c. 11), enabling persons to disclaim the vesting of any legal estate affected by onerous covenants.—PRACHY v. YOUNG, [1929] 1 Ch. 449; 98 L. J. Ch. 237; 140 L. T. 608.

1526b. Mortgagee by sub-demise—Equity of redemption statute-barred—No declaration of vesting of head term.—Prior to 1926 the equity of redemption of leaseholds, which had been mtgd. by subdemise without any trust of the nominal reversion, became statute-barred. The mtgees. did not after 1925 execute a declaration that the head term had become vested in them under Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 89 (3). Upon the expiration of the lease, the reversioners sought to make the mtgees. liable upon the repair covenant in the lease, on the ground that the whole term had automatically vested in them under the transitional provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 30):—Held: this was not a case within Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), Sched. I., Part II., para. 3. The words "entitled to require any legal estate to be conveyed" did not cover the case of a person who under sect. 89 (3) had power to declare a legal estate vested in himself; but only applied to cases where he could "require" someone to convey to or vest the legal estate in him, & the mtgees. were not liable on the covenant to repair.—*ST. There was a condition that the lease should not be assigned nor sublet except with the lessor's consent. The definition clause stated that the terms lessor & lessee should include their executors administrators & assigns. An assignee of the lessor sought to prevent assignees of the lessee from exercising any of the rights conferred upon the lessee by the indenture :—Held : (1) the indenture was not a lease but a licence ; (2) being a personal contract, it could only be enforced by persons between whom there was privity of contract, & this was so even if it was a restrictive covenant. The assignee of the lessee had therefore no rights under the document.—Clore v. THEATRICAL PROPERTIES, LTD., & WESTBY & CO., LTD., [1936] 3 All E. R. 483, C. A.

In 1926 the Crown proceeded against appts. alleging that poles, carrying telegraph wires, which they had erected on the roadway of a Canadian Govt. railway, were a trespass thereon, & claiming damages ; alternatively the Crown claimed a declaration of appts.' rights, if any. As to the main section of the telegraph line, the poles, as they stood in 1926, had been erected upon the roadway between 1905 & 1910 without leave or licence. As to two branch lines, the poles had been erected in 1893 & 1911 respectively, in each case while an agreement was in negotiation though no agreement was eventually concluded. The whole telegraph line, which was about 500 miles in length, was used by the public as well as by appts. :—Held : (1) on the facts, at the date of the proceedings all the poles were on the roadway with the licence of the Crown. Although appts. had originally been trespassers in respect of the main line poles, many years' acquiescence & a claim to the payment of rent, had long since prevented them from being so regarded ; in the case of the branch lines, it was to be inferred that the poles had been erected by licence ; (2) the licence was revocable in the absence of any facts from which a contract agreement until July 25, 1929, when, in consideration of the payment to him of $150, he assigned his rights under the agreement to the resp. Notice of the assignment was given to applt. on July 26, & it thereupon, by written notice to H., purported to cancel the agreement. The same evening (a Friday) it excluded H. & resp. from the theatre, & prevented them from conducting a boxing entertainment that had been arranged. Resp. & H. sued, claiming a declaration that the lease was valid & subsisting, & resp. also claimed damages. Applt. contended that the agreement only amounted to a license revocable at will, & that it had been so terminated & that the agreement was lease & not a mere license revocable at will.

He granted to Odhams Press, Ltd., the owners of a business called the Borough Billposting Co., the right to advertise on the flank walls. Pltf., the successor in title to the underlessor, sought an injunction to restrain deft. from permitting any person other than himself to use the flank walls for advertising purposes, on the grounds that the right to advertise was not assignable, or, alternatively, was not assignable apart from the land upon which the petrol station was situated, & also that there was an implied term that the walls would be used only for advertisements connected with the business of the petrol-filling station:—Held: (1) the underlease contained nothing restricting the legal right of deft. to deal freely with the subjects of the grant & he could advertise anything he chose upon the flanks in question; (2) there being no restriction upon the right to advertise, the right was not an easement, as there was no connection as to user between the dominant & the servient tenements.—*CLAPMAN v. 2011a. —.]—By a lease of 1838, land at the rear of four houses, numbered 16, 18, 20, & 22, was leased for a term ending Sept. 29, 1923, & by an underlease of 1906 was sub-let to J. till May 9, 1923. By an agreement of Oct. 10, 1914, J. let it to P. for three years from Oct. 12, 1914, at a rent of £2 a week, payable weekly. On the land, & extending along the rear of Nos. 16, 18, & 20, was a shed, in which P. carried on the business of a general dealer until 1923, when he assigned the business to his wife & thereafter managed it for her. In 1919 pltf. co. took an assignment of the land behind Nos. 16, 18, 20, & 22 for the rest of the term comprised in the lease of 1838, subject to the underlease of 1906. On July 8, 1920, the Midland Bank acquired the leasehold reversion immediately expectant on P.'s tenancy under the agreement of 1914: & on Oct. 6 in the same year pltf. co. acquired No. 18 & the land behind for fifty years from Sept. 29, 1920, subject to the lease of 1838. After the end of his tenancy in 1917, P. had continued in possession of the land & the shed, paying rent first to J., & after Mar. 1923, at J.'s direction, to the Midland Bank, which, in 1925, acquired the freehold reversion of the sd. Under Soldier's Settlement Act.—The Soldier's Settlement Board entered into an agreement with McC. for the sale of land to him as authorised by the Act. This agreement, & the Act itself, provided that such agreement could only be cancelled for default by the settler to comply with the terms thereof, & in the case of land the same could only be re-possessed upon & after the Board giving to the settler thirty days' notice of its intention to rescind said agreement:—Held: the tenancy at will, mentioned in sect. 22 (6) & sect. 31 of the Soldier's Settlement Act, is a special statutory tenancy at will, & is not the tenancy at will known to the common law; it is a modified or conditional tenancy at will. After the notice has been given, the settler, if he remains on the land, becomes merely a tenant at will.—MCLELLAN v. R., [1932] Ex. C. R. 13; reversd., [1932] S. C. R. 617; 4 D. L. R. 79.—CAN.

land at the rear of Nos. 20 & 22. No rent was paid by P. to pltf. co. There were negotiations at a later date for apportioning the rent between the bank & pltf. co. which did not result in a concluded agreement. In Sept. 1928, defts. entered into an agreement to purchase from the Bank the land at the rear of Nos. 20 & 22, & at the same time their solrs. wrote to pltf. co.'s solrs., asking if the co. would grant them a lease of the land in the rear of No. 18. After some correspondence pltf. co. refused to grant a lease of the land, & in Apr. 1929, commenced this action, claiming a declaration that it was entitled to the land, & alleging that deft. P. was at most a weekly tenant:—Held: by MAUGHAM, J. (a) mere continuance in possession by one originally in possession as tenant under a legal title, with the consent of the person who has become the landlord, may lead to the inference of a consensus that the one so continuing shall be a yearly tenant, but on the facts a consensus that P. should become a yearly tenant of pltf. co. could not be inferred; (b) the inference of a tenancy from year to year, which is drawn from the payment of rent by a tenant after the expiration of his tenancy, ought to be drawn only when such payments are by reference to a yearly rent, & P.'s payments of £2 a week rent to J. or the Midland Bank, after the expiration of the term granted by the agreement of 1914, were not so paid; by the Court of Appeal, on the facts there was no consensus between pltf. co. & defts. giving rise to the relation of landlord & tenant, without deciding the question whether, if there had been such a consensus, it would in law have created a yearly or a weekly tenancy.—*LADIES' HOSIERY & UNDERWEAR, LTD. v. 2101 i. ——— As to option to purchase.—A Crown lease provided that the lessee upon paying a certain stated sum would be entitled to a conveyance of the lands in fee simple. The lessees failed to renew their lease but held over. In 1927, the present occupants sent the Crown a cheque for the amount mentioned in the lease & requested a deed to the lands in question. The Crown returned the cheque & refused to convey the land for the sum offered, hence the present petition of right:—Held: the option to purchase contained in the lease in question herein, being unlimited as to time, was therefore inoperative & void because of the rule against perpetuities, & was not exercisable. The tenant who holds over with the consent of the landlord becomes a tenant from year to year & holds upon the terms created by the lease, so far as they are applicable to a tenancy from year to year. An option contained in a lease to purchase the reversion & so destroy the tenancy is not one of the terms of the tenancy; it is a provision outside of the terms which regulate the relations between the landlord as landlord, & the tenant as tenant, & is not one of the terms of the original tenancy which will be incorporated into the terms of the yearly tenancy created by the tenant holding over after the expiration of the lease.—TORNEY v. R., [1930] Ex. C. R. 178.—CAN.

In the county ct. the judge took the objection that the notice having been served before the Act was in force, he had no jurisdiction. That decision having been affirmed by the Div. 2243 ii. —.]—A covenant in a lease, which provides for a renewal of the term, in order to be valid must designate with reasonable certainty the date of the commencement & the duration of the renewal term to be granted. This certainty as to duration must appear from the express limitation of the parties or from reference to some collateral matter, itself certain or capable of being made so before the renewal lease takes effect which may, with equal certainty, be applied in measurement of the continuance of the term. In the present case (where the lease was of certain rooms & hallway in the lessor's building which adjoined the lessee's hotel, the leased premises being used in connection with the hotel):—Held: the language used showed that the intention was to provide for a right of renewal for such period as the lessees should need the use of the rooms for purposes specified, & as there was nothing in the covenant which enabled the ct. to determine the duration of the lessees' need for the rooms, the covenant was too indefinite to be enforced, & was therefore void for uncertainty.—GOURLAY & BILLINGS v. it charged all its undertaking & all its property, present & future, including its uncalled capital in favour of the debenture holders. On Apr. 22, 1929, the co. gave notice to the landlords under Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5, requiring them to grant to it a new lease of the premises. In July, 1929, the debenture holders in exercise of the power on that behalf in the debenture appointed a receiver of the property & assets therein comprised. The landlords having failed to comply with the co.'s request for the grant of a new lease the receiver on Sept. 23, 1929, commenced an action in the county ct. in the name of the co. to obtain the grant of a new lease. On Oct. 15 a compulsory order was made to wind up the company & a liquidator was appointed. At the hearing in the county ct. preliminary objections were taken on behalf of the landlords: (a) that an order having been made to wind up the co. the receiver could no longer continue the action, & (b) that the notice by the co. requiring the grant of a new lease was not in the "form prescribed" by County Court (Landlord & Tenant) Rules, 1928, Ord. 50B, r. 2. The county court judge upheld the preliminary objections. On appeal:—Held: (1) the right to apply for a renewal of the lease under sect. 5 was a right given by the co. to the debenture holders as part of their security, & the receiver was entitled to enforce that right notwithstanding the liquidation of the co.; (2) sect. 5 did not require that the notice of claim for a new lease should be in any prescribed form, & therefore Ord. 50B, r. 2, so far as it required that the notice should be in a prescribed form was ultra vires. —*GOUGH'S GARAGES, LTD. v. Therefore, on the expiration of such a lease, the lessee, if he can show that the compensation for goodwill to which under the Act he would be entitled would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill if he removed to & carried on his trade or business in other premises, may require a new lease of the premises which shall include the incorporeal right demised by the original lease. —*WHITLEY v. 2306g. Basis of compensation.—(1) Held: the basis of compensation under the Act is not the loss suffered by the tenant, but the benefit accruing to the landlord.

(2) Under sect. 4 (1) it is irrelevant to inquire whether the "higher rent" is derived from a letting for the purpose for which the premises were previously let or for any other purpose; & if the landlord could let the premises for any other purpose at a higher rent than they would have realised for the same purpose, goodwill included, he will not be liable to pay compensation to the tenant. —*HUDD v. 2306h. —[Pltfs. were the tenants of premises at which they & their predecessor in title had carried on the trade or business of a motor garage, repair works, & petrol-filling station for nearly fourteen years. They claimed under Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5, that a new lease of the premises should be granted to them on the ground that the sum that could be awarded to them as compensation for goodwill under sect. 4 would not compensate them for the loss they would sustain if they removed & carried on their business elsewhere. The referee appointed under sect. 21 of the Act adopted the following process in arriving at the value of the goodwill under the Act. Having assessed the average annual profits of the business at £750, he took one-third of that sum, i.e., £250, & capitalised it at two & a half years' purchase, making the capital value of the adherent profit £625. With that sum he compared the capital value of the increase in rental value of the premises due to causes irrespective of the tenants' trade or business. He found, as a fact, that the increase in rental value due to causes other than the trade or business was £50 a year. That sum he capitalised on what was called "the 7 per cent. table," or, at approximately, fourteen & a quarter years' purchase, arriving at a sum of over £700, & as that sum was more than the £625 capitalised value of the adherent profit, the referee was of the opinion that no compensation for goodwill was payable to pltfs. under the Act, & he could not recommend that a new lease should be granted to them. His report was adopted by the county ct. judge, who refused to grant a new lease on the ground that pltfs. had not shown a goodwill entitling them to compensation:—Held: the referee had adopted a wrong process in arriving at the value of the goodwill within sect. 4 of the Act. The test required by that sect. was to ascertain the difference between the rental value with goodwill & the rental value without goodwill. —WHITEMAN SMITH MOTOR CO., LTD. v. CHAPLIN, [1934] 2 K. It was also shown that there was a considerable body of custom created by him which was so personal to him that it attached to him, & not to the premises:—Held: (1) the club trade & the dining-room trade were properly taken into consideration in assessing the compensation for loss of goodwill; (2) the comparison with other neighbouring houses did not bar a right to compensation, so long as it was shown that appct. & his predecessors had made some relevant addition to the value of the premises; (3) as the personal goodwill could not be made the subject of compensation under the Act, this was a case in which a new lease ought to be granted.—*DARTFORD BREWERY Co., LTD. v. 2306l. Action for compensation—Time for bringing.—Held: a tenant is not entitled, before the tenancy has expired & before he has quitted the holding, to bring an action to recover compensation under Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 26), s. 4 (1).—SMITH v. METROPOLITAN PROPERTIES Co., LTD., [1932] 1 K. B. 314; 101 L. J. K. B. 110; 146 L. T. 133; 48 T. L. R. 32; 75 Sol. Jo. 813, D. C.

2306m. Premises for which compensation payable—Licensed premises.—The tenant of premises licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquor for consumption off the premises gave notice to his landlord under sect. 4 (1), that he claimed to be entitled, at the termination of his tenancy on quitting the holding, to be paid by the landlord compensation for goodwill, & further that, as the sum that could be awarded under sect. 4 would not compensate him for the loss of goodwill he would suffer if he removed & carried on business elsewhere, he claimed, in the alternative, to be entitled to a new lease in accordance with sect. 5. The premises had been licensed during the whole of appct.'s tenancy:—Held: (1) the claim was not invalid by being stated in the alternative; (2) the terms of proviso (c) to sect. 4 (1) did not debar a tenant of premises where the sale of intoxicating liquor was the sole trade carried on from claiming compensation; (3) the tenant, in order to prove that goodwill had become attached to the premises was not bound to show that he had done more than any tenant of ordinary capacity & energy would have done; (4) the tribunal under the Act of 1927 for determining the amount of compensation payable to a tenant for goodwill, or determining whether a new lease should be granted to him, is the county ct.; & in dealing with a report made by a Referee under sect. 21 the county ct. judge may if he thinks fit adopt, vary or disregard the findings of the Referee; (5) on an appeal from the decision of the county ct. in such a case the appellate tribunal is bound by the findings of the county ct. judge unless (a) there was no evidence to support them, or (b) the findings are mixed questions of fact & law which turn upon the construction of the statute, (b) a finding as to goodwill is a proper subject of appeal.—*SIMPSON v. PART X. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 1.

sw. Common court—Repair—Extent of obligation.—The wife of the tenant of a house in a tenement brought an action against the proprietors for damages in respect of injuries, which she alleged she had sustained in consequence of a fall caused by her foot catching in a depression in the pavement of a common court at the back of the tenement. Pursuer averred that the depression had been there, & the condition of the pavement had been defective & dangerous, for some years, & that the defective state of the pavement was open & obvious. She did not aver that she was unaware of the defect, or that she had ever complained of it to defenders, nor did she deny defenders' averment that she had lived in the tenement for years:—Held: pursuer's averments were not relevant to infer liability against defenders.—YOUNG v. CAMPBELL, [1924] S. O. 157.—SCOT.

sz. Clause exempting landlord from liability in specified cases—Whether negligence included.—While the janitor of an apartment block was using highest gasoline in ridding one of the rooms of vermin, about which the tenant of the room had complained, an explosion occurred & the tenant was burned & her effects destroyed. The janitor was authorised by the president of deft. co., which was the landlord, to so use the gasoline, & the work required the removal & replacing of fixed boards & rails which were part of the permanent structure of the building. The lease exempted the landlord from all liability for any accident, loss or damage arising in or about the building or premises from heating, steam, water, gas or electric lighting, or from any plant or appliances incident thereto, & whether arising from fire, frost, rain, weather or defects in construction or materials "or from any cause whatsoever"; it also exempted the landlord from liability for any acts of any agent, servant or workmen in any way occupied or engaged in or about the building or premises or in any capacity whatsoever; it also provided that "the lessors are not responsible for the cleaning or caretaking" of the demised premises:—Held: even if the janitor's acts constituted negligence, the work was not "cleaning" within the meaning of the lease; the ejusdem generis rule was not applicable to the acts referred to in the exemption clauses; the expression "agent, servant or workmen" included all persons acting for deft. for whose acts it would be held responsible & thus included deft.'s president; & the exemption clauses covered negligent acts.—FINKEMORE v. T. UNDERWOOD, LTD., [1930] 2 W. L. R. 348; 3 D. L. R. 939; 24 Alta. L. R. 616; revers., [1930] 2 D. L. R. 873; 1 W. W. R. 665.—CAN.

y. Railing on porch.—The male tenant was one of two suites which comprised the upper floor of a building owned by deft. The female pltf., wife of her co-pltf., was shaking a rug on a porch at the rear of the suite when the railing thereon gave way & she was injured. In an action for damages pltfs. contended that the railing, in the condition it was, was a trap:—Held: after reviewing the facts as to the situation of the porch & its relation to the two suites, the railing was part of the demised premises, & therefore, pltfs. had no right of recovery against deft.—AGNEW v. HAMILTON, [1932] 3 W. W. R. 57; 46 B. C. R. 147; affd., 46 B. C. R. 362.—CAN.

sz. Damage by fire—Inflammable refuse by elevator shaft.—Pltf.'s husband leased from deft. a suite in deft.'s apartment building. On each floor, beside the freight elevator, & separated from the hall by swinging wooden doors, was a platform on which were garbage receptacles. A fire occurred in the building, & in efforts to escape pltf. was injured & her husband was killed. For this & for property loss pltf. sued for damages. The jury found that deft. was negligent in that it caused or allowed inflammable refuse to be deposited beside the elevator shaft & failed to safeguard such refuse against the danger of fire; that such condition amounted to a trap or concealed danger created by deft. & caused the injuries, death & loss; & judgment was entered for damages. The judgment was set aside by the Ct. of Appeal. Pltf. appealed:—Held: pltf. could not recover.—HEAKE v. CITY SECURITIES CO., LTD., [1932] S. C. R. 250.—CAN.

sz. Unguarded lightwell—Liability to guests of caretaker.—Pltf. at night fell into an unguarded lightwell adjoining a path or ramp leading to a door forming an access to the caretaker of deft.'s flats. Pltf. was unaware of the lightwell & had received no warning. The caretaker occupied rooms in the flats for which she paid. The purpose of pltf.'s visit was to ask her to do some domestic work by the day elsewhere. The lightwell was plainly visible in daylight; but in darkness, owing to its unusual character, position, & construction, it amounted to a danger of a kind which a visitor who had not been warned would not reasonably anticipate:—Held: (1) pltf. came neither as a trespasser nor as an invitee but as a licensee; (2) the obligation of deft. as occupier of the premises towards such a visitor as pltf. was to take reasonable care to prevent harm to her from a state or condition of the premises known to deft. but unknown to the visitor, which the use of reasonable care on the visitor's part would not disclose & which, considering the nature of the premises, the occasion of the leave & licence & the circumstances generally, a reasonable man would be misled into failing to anticipate or suspect; (3) the facts (a) that the injured person was brought upon the premises by a tenant of rooms therein (the caretaker) who took them with an access in the condition complained of, (b) that the danger existed in the premises when the implied licence was given by deft. as occupier for the entry of such persons as pltf., (c) that the danger was not hidden, except by darkness, were all circumstances which must be considered in determining whether the occupier has omitted to use the care to which the licensee was entitled, but none of them was in itself decisive of that question; (4) that the condition of the place constituted a hidden danger from which it was the duty of deft. to exercise reasonable care to safeguard a licensee such as pltf.; (5) deft. had failed in that duty & pltf., who was not guilty of contributory negligence, was entitled to recover damages for her injuries.—LIPMAN v. CLENDINNEN (1932), 48 C. L. R. 550; 6 A. L. J. 150.—AUS.

2386 iv. — — — — —Liability to stranger.—Where a landlord has covenanted to light the premises & knows or ought to know that, if he does not do so sufficiently, he will expose a person rightfully using the premises without warning to a concealed danger or trap, he owes a duty to such persons to use reasonable care to prevent, by notice or sufficient lighting, damages from such danger.—BENTLEY v. VANCOUVER EXHIBITION ASSOCN., [1935] 3 W. W. R. 129; 50 B. C. R. 343; revers., [1936] 1 W. W. R. 480; 2 D. L. R. 128.—CAN.

sz. Defective lift—Injury to licensee.—Pltf. was sent by his employers to deliver a message to a firm of solrs. who occupied offices in a building owned by defts., & let by them to various tenants, the passages, approaches, & lift of which were under the control of the owners. Pltf., as he approached the lift way, thought he could see the outline of the lift, whereupon he opened the door to the liftway & stepped in, & as the lift was not there, fell to the basement & sustained serious injuries. The lift was of the automatic type & the door to the lift way should not have been opened unless the lift was there. In an action for damages against the owners for alleged negligence in allowing the lift way to be out of repair, unsafe, & dangerous, in that there was a defective lock to the door & that the approach to the lift way was unlighted:—Held: the inadequate lighting & defective lock did not constitute a hidden danger which pltf. could not, having regard to his own safety, have detected by reasonable care & observation, pltf. was a licensee, there was no proof that defts. actually knew of the defective lock, & the action must fail.—HAMILTON METHODIST CHURCH TRUSTEES v. JONES (1934), 29 M. C. R. 47.—N.Z.

2396a. —.]—Pltf. was on his way to visit the tenants of offices in a building owned by defts. The door leading to the lift was partially open, & pltf. thinking that the lift was there, stepped through the door, fell down the shaft & was injured. In an action for damages for the injuries received defts. contended that they had contracted with independent contractors to keep the lift in good working order, & that they did not know & could not reasonably be expected to know that the lift was out of order:—Held: pltf. was a licensee of defts.; the negligence was that of the independent contractors & not of defts.; there was no trap of which defts. knew or ought to have known; there was no contributory negligence on the part of pltf.—*MORGAN v. 2498a. — Question of fact.—By an agreement, in the form of a letter dated Dec. 12, 1928, & signed by deft., deft. agreed to purchase from pltf. for £800 a leasehold house for the residue of the term of 94 years comprised in a lease of 1849. The letter stated that deft. understood the ground floor & basement to be let to a tenant holding over as a yearly tenant at a rent of £60 a year, payable quarterly, & it fixed Mar. 25, 1929, as the date for completion. Pltf. signed an acknowledgment agreeing the terms as in the letter.

2395 v. —.]—Deft., the owner of an apartment house, retained in his possession or under his control the entrances, passageways & an automatic elevator. Pltf., who lived elsewhere, entered the building for the purpose of taking his father to a doctor. His father was staying in one of the suites of which pltf.'s sister was the tenant. Pltf., thinking he saw the elevator standing at the main floor, did not press the button, but slid aside the outer door & on making a step fell to the bottom of the shaft. Under a contract entered into by deft. the elevator had been inspected weekly & repaired when necessary; & deft. employed a janitor whose duty it was to ascertain & report whether the elevator was working in an unusual way & the janitor was competent to do so. It was found that deft. neither knew nor should have known that there was a condition existing which might permit the door to open when the elevator was not level with the floor; & it could not be found, on the evidence, that the premises were not properly lighted. A warning reading in part, "Be sure elevator has landed before stepping in," was posted at or near the elevator door:—Held: pltf. was a bare licensee, & the extent of deft.'s duty towards him was not to expose him to a hidden peril or trap, i.e., a peril not apparent to the licensee but the existence of which was known or ought to have been known to deft.—SEIDER v. RAY, [1937] 1 W. W. R. 440. CAN.—

b 1. —.]—Where a landlord lets suites of rooms to separate tenants

& provides a common means of access which they must, or are entitled to make use of, he is under an implied contractual obligation of inspecting the access from time to time, & when necessary, repairing it so as to prevent the risk of accident, & is liable in damages for injuries sustained by the tenant because of his failure to carry out this duty. This rule was applied in the present case to the giving way of the railing on a rear balcony which served as a rear exit & entrance to the pltf.'s suite & those of the other tenants on the same floor. Semble: the balcony railing in the condition it was at the time of the accident constituted a trap.—MCPHERSON v. CREDIT FONCIER FRANCO CANADIEN (Alta.), [1930] 1 D. L. R. 179; 24 Alta. L. R. 240; [1929] 3 W. W. R. 348; aff., [1929] 4 D. L. R. 395; 2 W. W. R. 623.—CAN.

1 i. — Other trade carried on—Consequent refusal of justices to renew.—Held: as the tenant had brought about the refusal of the renewal of the licence by her own act, the lessor was entitled to recover possession of the premises & damages for breaches of covenants.—MAGUIRE v. DAY, [1926] N. 180.—IR.

1 ii. — Proposed transfer of license to other premises—Leaving demised premises unlicensed.—Pltf. were the owners of certain premises to which a seven-day license was attached, & deft. was their lessee & the holder of the license. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to do, or suffer to be done, on the premises any act whereby the license might be forfeited or the renewal thereof withheld, & also a covenant that he would insure the license against forfeiture in the joint names of the lessors & the lessee in the sum of £500. The lessee further covenanted to deliver up the premises on the expiration of the lease in all respects in such condition as should be consistent with the due performance & observance of the said covenants. Deft., who was also the owner of other premises, situate in the same licensing area, & to which a six-day license was attached, served notice to have the seven-day license transferred to the premises to which the six-day license was attached:—Held: as the effect of the transfer would be that pltf.'s premises, to which the seven-day license was attached, would, for the purposes of Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1902, be statutorily deemed never to have been licensed, so that when the lease expired pltf. would get back premises to which no license was attached, they were entitled, in view of the covenants in the lease, to an injunction to restrain deft. from exercising the right of transfer conferred on him by Intoxicating Liquor Act, 1927, s. 11 (1).—HEATHCOTE v. MAGUIRE, [1929] 1 R. 170.—IR.

PART X. SECT. 14.

sy. Lease of warehouse space.—A lessee of warehouse space sued his lessor for damages caused by the freezing & bursting of a standpipe in the warehouse. There was no provision in the lease as to heating:—Held: the landlord was under no duty to prevent the standpipe from freezing.—SCYTHES v. GIBSONS, LTD., [1927] 2 D. L. R. 834; 5 C. C. R. 352.—CAN.

In the lease of 1849 were lessee's covenants to do outside painting, deliver up, repair, insure, produce assignments, not to allow building without consent, & not to carry on offensive trades or do "any . . . thing which may be to the annoyance, damage, or inconvenience of the occupiers of the neighbouring premises"; & there was a proviso for re-entry on non-performance of any of the covenants. The abstract was sent to deft.'s solrs. on Jan. 15, 1929, deft. meanwhile, to pltf.'s knowledge, negotiating for the purchase of the freehold. On Mar. 4 deft.'s solrs. wrote to pltf.'s solrs. that deft. would not buy the house unless H., the tenant, who was in arrear with the rent & was not, as pltf. had represented her to be, a desirable tenant, was bought out. They added that there was no binding contract, which they later explained to mean that the lease of 1849 had not been produced to deft. Deft. did not complete by the date fixed. In an action by pltf. for specific performance:—Held: (1) the question whether covenants in a lease are "usual covenants" is in each case a question of fact for the ct. to decide upon the evidence.

I think it right to express my opinion, after having heard & considered all the numerous authorities which have been cited to me, that the question whether particular covenants are usual covenants is a question of fact, & that the decision of the ct. on that point must depend upon the admissible evidence given before the ct. in relation to that question. I think that it is proper to take the evidence of conveyancers & others familiar with the practice in reference to leases & that it is also permissible to examine books of precedents. It is permissible to obtain evidence with regard to the practice in the particular district in which the premises in question are situated (MAUGHAM, J.).

(2) A covenant to do nothing to the "inconvenience of occupiers of neighbouring premises" is usual only in leases of properties on large estates, & in a lease of one house is unusual & onerous; (3) the proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants in the lease must be held on the authorities & on the evidence to be an unusual & onerous provision; (4) in the circumstances deft.'s right to object to the lease as containing unusual & onerous covenants had not been waived.—*FLEXMAN v. The lessees demised the premises to M. & on the same day M. sub-let part of the demised premises to the lessees. The lessees objected to produce this sub-lease in accordance with the above-mentioned covenant on the ground that the covenant did not apply to a sub-term which was not derived immediately out of the term granted by the head lease:—Held: the covenant was not limited, as suggested by the lessees, & it applied to the sub-lease in question. The lessees were therefore bound to produce it for registration.—PORTMAN v. LYONS (J.) & Co., LTD., [1937] Ch. 584; [1936] 3 All E. R. 819; 106 L. J. Ch. 277; 156 L. T. 141; 53 T. L. 2666a. Consent given to one lessee subject to consent of second lessee—Consent of second lessee not obtained.]—In 1925 the whole of certain premises were demised to deft. bank with a restriction against alteration without the consent of the lessor. In 1933 the bank demised the second & third floors of the premises to pltf. with the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment & to perform & observe the covenants in the head lease. In 1934 defts., the Elevenist Syndicate, wished to take the first floor of the building & for this purpose extensive alterations were necessary. The bank obtained the consent of the head lessor to the alterations subject to the consent being obtained of all the sub-lessees, & the bank subsequently gave a similar consent subject to the same terms & conditions. Pltf.'s consent was never obtained. The Elevenist Syndicate, however, proceeded to instruct contractors to carry out the alterations, & no proper precautions being taken, pltf. suffered damage by reason of the dust & noise caused by such building operations. Pltf. brought an action for damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, nuisance & trespass:—Held: (1) as the consent to the alterations being carried out was subject to pltf.'s consent being obtained, & this was never obtained, the position was that there was no proper consent to the alterations being effected; (2) the bank's consent being subject to the consent of pltf. which was not obtained by the Elevenist Syndicate, there was no breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment & no derogation from the grant; (3) although the Elevenist Syndicate had employed independent contractors, they were liable in damages for nuisance since the work to be done in its very nature involved a risk of damage being done to pltf.; (4) as the bank had covenanted with pltf. that it would observe all the covenants of the head lease & were in default upon this covenant, the appeal must be allowed without costs.—*MATANIA v. Pltf. had been the sub-tenant of deft.'s predecessor in title of part of deft.'s property, & when deft. became tenant of this part he agreed verbally to grant to pltf. the grazing rights. Deft. had worked his quarry for a number of years before this agreement. In an action for damages for injury suffered by pltf. as a result of the working of the quarry:—Held: (1) it was an implied condition of the agreement whereby deft. had granted the grazing rights to pltf., that deft. should continue to work the quarry, & in the absence of improper use of the quarry pltf. could not complain of injury to the land, the subject of deft.'s grant; (2) no such condition could be implied with regard to pltf.'s own land, & he could sue for any damage to such land from a wrongful act by deft.—*THOMAS v. 2792a. — — —.]—Certain premises were let for twenty-one years in consideration of (a) a premium of £1,000, of which £200 was paid on the execution of the lease, & (b) a yearly rent. The lease provided that the lessee would pay "that portion viz. £800 of the premium of £1,000 hereby reserved which is not paid on the execution hereof" by certain instalments, "provided that in the event of the term hereby granted being determined by re-entry . . . all the premium unpaid at the date of such re-entry shall become immediately due & payable." A right of re-entry was given if the rent reserved or any instalment of the premium should be in arrear for a certain time. During the currency of the lease, & before the balance of the premium had been paid, the premises, which had been mortgaged by the lessor, were sold to the lessee by the mtgees. in exercise of their powers of sale. Thereupon the lessor sued the lessee to recover the unpaid balance of the premium. The lessee contended that on the determination of the lease all his obligations thereunder, including the obligation as to the premium, were extinguished:—Held: the premium was not a "demand . . . in, to, or on the property" within Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 63 (1), or a "covenant or provision . . . having reference to the subject-matter" of the lease within sect. 141 (1) of that Act, but was a sum which the lessee had agreed to pay in order to obtain the lease, & therefore, that his obligation to pay the full amount of the premium was not extinguished by the determination of the lease.—*HILL v. There was a further covenant by the lessee that he would not do or suffer to be done in or on the demised premises anything which might, in the judgment of the lessors, be or grow to the injury or annoyance of the lessors or their tenants, or the occupiers of adjoining premises. In 1914 the lessee, without the knowledge of or licence from the lessors, sublet three rooms of the first floor of the demised house to a subtenant, whose tenancy expired in June, 1926. On July 19 the lessee, without any licence from the lessors, sublet the same three rooms to P. as a subtenant at a rent of £1 a week. A tailoring business had been carried on in the premises prior to the making of the lease, & the fixtures & fittings in question were suitable for & had been used in carrying on such a business. These fixtures were set out in the Sched. There was a covenant not to carry on noxious, noisy or offensive trades, & also a covenant to keep demised premises & all permitted additions & landlord's fixtures & fittings in good tenantable repair & condition, & not to make an alteration. There was a covenant to yield up premises, fixtures, fittings & additions in good & tenantable repair:—Held: "alterations" must be construed in accordance with the context, & an assignee of the lease who proposed to remove the fittings & fixtures & store them in a safe place on the premises & to erect other fixtures & fittings necessary for the purpose of using the premises as a retail creamery shop, had not committed a breach of the covenant as to alterations.—*WHITE v. covenants:—Held: (1) there had been a forfeiture of the lease by breaches of both the restrictive covenants, & the words in the first covenant, "wherein no business of any kind is carried on," must be construed as adding to the stringency of the covenant that the house should be used as a private dwelling-house; (2) Rent Restriction Acts afforded no defence to the action, as K. was in actual possession of the whole of the dwelling-house in the interval between the two tenancies, & 1923 Act, s. 2 (1), came into operation, & the premises had become decontrolled.—*BARTON v. 2932a. — Conversion of dwelling-house into flats—Services supplied to tenants.]—By a lease dated Apr. 11, 1865, the Governors of a College granted to D. the lease of a private dwelling-house on their estate, the amenities of which they were very desirous to safeguard, for a long term of years. There was a covenant in the lease by D. that he would not (inter alia) suffer the demised premises to be used for carrying on thereon any trade or business or for any purpose that might be deemed by the Governors or their successors an annoyance or inconvenience to the neighbourhood. There was the usual power of re-entry for breach of any covenant. In 1894 the lease was assigned to deft. R., subject, however, to an underlease to G. This underlease, which contained the same terms as the headlease, was in 1928 assigned to deft. P. P., the underlessee, having by certain internal structural alterations of the demised premises converted them into three separate flats, proceeded, without the knowledge or consent of plffs., who were the successors in title to the Governors who had originally granted the lease & also the present reversioners in fee simple expectant on the determination thereof, to let them out to tenants at various rentals. P. also contracted to supply the tenants with certain services, hot water, heat, lighting, etc. It was proved in evidence that R. knew of the acts of P., but took no steps to prevent the letting or stop the acts in any way. Plffs. thereupon sought to recover possession on the ground of alleged breaches of the covenants in the headlease as to user:—Held:

(1) what P. had done constituted the carrying on of a business, inasmuch as she retained control of an important portion of the demised premises & was under liability to supply certain services, such as hot water, etc. She had therefore committed a breach of both the covenants as to user contained in the underlease & as to acts deemed by plffs. to cause an annoyance or inconvenience to the neighbourhood; (2) R., by knowingly permitting the letting out of the demised premises in flats & taking no steps to prevent what she had been informed would constitute a breach of the covenants in the headlease, had committed a breach of the covenant "not to suffer the same to be used for the carrying on of any . . . business or for any purpose that might be deemed by the Governors or their successors to be an annoyance or inconvenience to the neighbourhood." Plffs. were therefore entitled to an order for possession of the demised premises.

(3) The words "permit" & "suffer" have been the subject of judicial decision, & in one case I think it was said they were synonymous; but whether this is in accordance with other decisions is not material to this case. Speaking for myself, with all possible respect to the learned judge who said so, I think there may well be as a matter of construction a substantial difference between the word "permit" & the word "suffer," but, as I say, it is not material to consider it here. The word in the case before me is "suffer," and at any rate that must cover allowing something to be done which the covenantor has the complete power to prevent (LUX-MOORE, J.)—*BARTON v. 2995b. — — — — — Alteration amounting to improvement.]—By a lease dated Apr. 2, 1930, certain premises were demised to deft. for a term of years. The lease contained covenants by the lessee (inter alia) (a) not to make any alteration or addition to the premises, except such as might from time to time have been authorised by the landlord in writing; (b) not to cut, maim or injure any of the walls or timbers thereof; & (c) not to assign or under-let the premises or any part thereof without the written consent of the landlord. The lessee having contracted to sub-let the premises to A., & for this purpose desiring to carry out certain structural alterations, which included the alteration of the position of a staircase, in pursuance of the covenant in the lease, asked the landlord for his permission. The landlord refused his sanction to the suggested alterations except on certain conditions, which were unacceptable to the lessee. The lessee thereupon threatened to carry out the alterations, & the landlord commenced an action for an injunction to restrain him from so doing. Questions arose (a) whether Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (2), applied, & (b) whether the landlord had under the circumstances unreasonably withheld his consent :—Held : (1) the sub-sect. applied & must be read into the appropriate covenant, & the landlord could not unreasonably withhold his consent if the alteration or addition sought to be made would in fact effect an improvement. The circumstances under which an alteration or addition constitutes an improvement considered; (2) in the circumstances of the case, the withholding of consent on the part of the landlord was unreasonable, & the alteration could have been made without any further application to him.—BALLS BROS., LTD. v. SINCLAIR, [1931] 2 Ch. 325; 100 L. J. Ch. 377; 146 L. T. 300.

2995c. Onus of proof of unreasonable withholding.]—In a lease in which resps. were the lessors & appts. were the lessees, appts. covenanted (inter alia), that they would not make any structural alterations on the demised premises without the previous consent in writing of the landlords, & would not commit, or permit to be committed, waste, & that they would use & occupy the demised premises as a first-class shop. Appts. acquired a lease of a piece of land behind the demised premises, & desiring to erect one large shop over the whole property, they proposed pulling down the back wall of the shop on the demised premises, moving the main staircase, lavatories & ventilating apparatus, & making other structural alterations. Resps. would only grant their consent upon payment by appts. of the sum of £7,000. Appts. regarded this sum as unreasonable & offered instead : (a) a covenant to reinstate the premises at the expiration of the lease; (b) an insurance with an insurance co. to be approved by resps. to secure the fulfilment of such covenant; & (c) payment of a sum equalling any diminution in value of the demised premises, "whatever sum a ct. thinks reasonable & proper to be paid." Upon resps. refusing to agree to these terms, appts. sought a declaration under Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (2), that resps. were unreasonably withholding their consent & that appts. were entitled to make the proposed alterations without further request for consent or licence subject to : (a) an undertaking to reinstate the demised premises at the expiration or sooner determination of the term in the condition in which the premises now are; (b) securing the performance of this undertaking by a policy of insurance; & (c) paying to resps. such sum (if any) as the ct. shall deem to be reasonable :—Held : (1) the onus of proving that the licence or consent was unreasonably withheld was upon appts., & as there was insufficient evidence to show whether the sum demanded, viz., £7,000, was reasonable or unreasonable, the ct. could not hold that the consent was being unreasonably withheld; (2) appts. having

It also contained a covenant by the lessee "not to employ or use, or permit to be employed or used, any part of the said demised premises, or any house or buildings thereon, as a shop or tavern or public-house, nor for the purpose of the trade or business of a soap-boller, chandler, baker, butcher, fishmonger, poulterer, greengrocer, distiller, sugar-baker, brewer, druggist, apothecary, tanner, skinner, lime-burner, brick-burner, tile-burner, hatter, silversmith, copper-smith, pewterer, founder, black-smith, paper manufacturer, or any other offensive or noisy trade, business or profession whatsoever. . . ." The house was erected pursuant to the above-mentioned covenant, & the lessee's interest in the lease subsequently became vested in deft., who, by erecting internal partitions & by fitting gas fires, cookers, & geysers, converted the house into fifteen self-contained flats. The lessor brought an action claiming an injunction to restrain deft. from letting out the flats to tenants & to restore the premises :—Held : although the covenant prohibited deft. from carrying on certain specified trades or businesses & from carrying on all noisy or offensive trades, the letting of flats was neither noisy nor offensive & therefore there had been no breach of the covenant. Further, on the evidence, deft.'s acts did not amount to waste.—VERNON & BARLEE v. SMALL, [1936] 1 R. 677.—IR.

PART XII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 5.—A.

b i. — Screaming baby.]—The landlord sought to evict the tenant because of the screaming of the tenant's two-year-old child; & contended that he "believes" that the tenant was permitting the premises to be used for the purpose of disturbing other tenants when the baby screamed therein, & that his, the landlord's, "belief" was the sole test of a breach of the covenant. There was no question but that the other tenants were seriously disturbed by the child's crying, but there was evidence that the tenant was doing all he could to quiet it :—Held : it was impossible to hold, on the evidence, that the landlord could have had any honest belief that the tenant was committing a breach of said covenant.—JOHANNSON v. BERMAN, [1930] 2 W. W. R. 569; [1931] 1 D. L. R. 255 39 Man. L. R. 161.—CAN.

adduced evidence at the trial that £7,000 was a reasonable sum, could not then ask the judge to refer the question of what sum was reasonable to an official or special referee, though they might have asked him, in his discretion, to do so before adducing evidence. Further, where evidence has been so adduced before the trial judge, the Ct. of Appeal cannot be asked to refer the matter.

The appeal was dismissed on the above ground, but their Lordships stated their views upon the construction of Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (2), as follows: (3) improvements within the sub-sect. must be improvements from the point of view of the tenant & not necessarily from that of the landlord; (4) (GREENE, L.J., dissenting): such improvements are not necessarily alterations increasing the value of the demised property regarded separately & by itself, but include alterations by which the tenant can, consistently with the other conditions of the lease, obtain the most beneficial user of the premises as premises, & include the user of the premises along with other premises, subject always to a provision for reinstatement. Such alterations may still be improvements, although they include the removal of party walls & fixtures from the demised premises, provided they are reinstated at the determination of the term; (5) (GREENE, L.J., dissenting): the alteration of the demised premises by making them together with other premises into a composite shop, is not a breach of a covenant to use them as a first-class shop; (6) such alteration to form a composite shop was not a breach of a covenant against waste, because that covenant must be read subject to the previous covenant not to make alterations without the consent of the landlord; (7) the words in sect. 19 (3) requiring the landlord to grant his consent upon payment of a sum found by the ct. to be reasonable, only apply to that sub-sect. & have no reference to the other sub-sects. of that sect.—WOOLWORTH (F. W.) & CO., LTD. v. LAMBERT, [1937] Ch. 37; [1936] 2 All E. R. 1523; 106 L. J. Ch. 15; 155 L. T. 236; 52 T. L. R. 732; 80 Sol. Jo. 703, C. A.

proposed alterations included pulling down the back wall of the shop on the demised premises, moving the main staircase, & making other material alterations. In previous proceedings, the Ct. of Appeal had by a majority expressed the view that what was intended to be done was an improvement within Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), but dismissed the appeal upon other grounds. Deft. co., after the conclusion of the appeal, wrote to pltfs. stating that it was desirous of executing the works, & offering an undertaking to reinstate the premises upon the determination of the lease, an undertaking to pay all costs & expenses & to provide security for the performance of the undertaking to reinstate. Pltfs. withheld their consent to the execution of the works upon these terms, & refused to go to arbn. upon the question of the amount of the compensation or to place that question before any tribunal. Pltfs. then brought this action, claiming a declaration that the proposed works were breaches of certain covenants in the lease & that the licence to perform such works had not been unreasonably withheld within Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 19 (2). Deft. co. counterclaimed for a declaration that the proposed works were improvements within the Act:—Held: (1) the question of whether or not an alteration is an improvement must be considered from the point of view of the tenant; (2) the alterations here proposed were improvements; (3) the landlord's consent in this case had been unreasonably withheld; (4) (per SLESSER, L.J.): the question of improvement must be limited to an improvement of the demised property; (5) (per SLESSER, L.J.): the onus of proving that the withholding by a landlord of his consent is unreasonable is upon the tenant. If, however, the landlord merely refuses, but gives no reason for so doing, the onus is upon him to show that his action was reasonable.—LAMBERT v. WOOLWORTH & CO., LTD. After the making of the lease, deft. co. made a renewal lease to G. of store premises immediately adjoining those leased to pltf., the business to be carried on therein by G. being that of selling precisely the same kind of goods that pltf. was to sell:—Held: the renewal of G.'s lease was a breach of the agreement with pltf. not to enter into any such lease, & deft. co. was liable to pltf. in damages by reason of the breach.—GEARY v. Some six years later, defts. let the adjoining shop subject to a similar covenant, the business stated being for the sale of tailor & dress-making trimmings & cloths. Pltf. contended that this was a derogation from the grant of the lessor, as frustrating the purpose for which, in the contemplation of both parties, the premises were let to pltf. :—Held: it was not within the reasonable contemplation of the parties that defts. were putting themselves under an obligation not to let their adjoining property to a trade rival of pltf.'s.—*PORT v. 3070a. ——— Building scheme.]—Pltf. was the lessee for a term of years of a house built on a plot of land which formed part of an estate laid out, as the ct. assumed for the purpose of the decision, as a building estate under a scheme. One of the lessee's covenants was not to convert use or occupy the premises into or for certain purposes or use the same otherwise than as a private dwelling-house without the consent in writing of the lessor having been first obtained. Deft. as the successor in title to the original lessor was the owner of the alleged building estate, including the house leased to pltf., & of divers other houses held by lessees subject to covenants identical with those in the pltf.'s lease. Pltf. alleged that under an implied condition in the general building scheme deft. was not entitled to permit any relaxation of or to remit any of the covenants in respect of the several parts of the estate so as substantially to depreciate the value of the other parts of the estate; & he claimed an injunction to restrain deft. from permitting any lessee or purchaser to use any part of the estate otherwise than in accordance with the scheme:—Held: the words "without the consent in writing of the said lessor having been first obtained," must be read in their natural sense as conferring on the lessor the widest possible power of giving or withholding his consent. The lessor was therefore entitled to authorise whatever user of the property he desired without regard to anything but his own wishes. Pltf.'s action consequently failed.—PEARCE v. MARYON-WILSON, [1935] Ch. 188; 104 L. J. Ch. 169; 152 L. T. 443; 78 Sol. Jo. 860.

The second deft. was a tenant of the first deft. & it was alleged that by carrying on a garage & motor-repairing business, such second deft. was liable for a breach of the covenant:—Held: under Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 44 (5), the onus was upon pltf. to show that the second deft. had notice of the covenant in question & such notice not being proved, the second deft. was not liable for any breach of the covenant.—*SHEARS v. b 1. ———.]—A lease provided that the premises were let "for the purpose of a retail merchandise store." The lessee covenanted not to sublet the premises or assign the lease without the written consent of the lessor, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld. In 1935 the lessee sublet to one B., without having obtained the lessor's consent; it, the consent, had been applied for but the lessor did not reply to the requests made for it. In 1936 B. sublet to O., who used the premises as a pool room. The lessor sued for damages for breach of the covenant & also asked for an injunction. His claim for relief was founded upon the allegation that deft. sublet the premises early in 1936 & upon the further statement that the premises were used as a pool room & not "for the purpose of a retail merchandise store" as provided in the lease. There was no complaint that deft., without the consent of pltf., assigned the lease to B. in May, 1935. Judgment was given pltf. for $100 as nominal damages with costs to the def't. was given costs incurred after the payment in, with a set-off. Pltf. appealed & def't. cross-appealed:—Held: the appeal should be dismissed & the cross-appeal allowed. The claim for damages against def't. was misconceived. The judgment of the trial judge was founded upon the assignment of the lease by def't. to B., a cause of action which was not pleaded, or relied upon during the trial or on the argument of the appeal. Def't., however, in subletting to B. parted with or assigned its whole interest in the premises, & as it gave no assent to the subletting by B. to O. & as B. was not its servant or agent it was in no sense responsible for the breach of a particular covenant on the part of either B. or O.—*MILLAR v. 3120a. —.]—At common law in the absence of express contract a landlord of an unfurnished house is not liable to his tenant, nor is a vendor of real estate liable to his purchaser, for defects in the house or land rendering it dangerous or unfit for occupation, even if the defects are due to his construction or are within his knowledge.

A firm of builders, having built several houses on an estate of which they were the owners, sold to one C. a house which was nearly completed. They agreed to complete the house by the end of Oct. 1929, & to make it fit for habitation, & like in decoration & design to the other houses on the estate. The agreement contained a clause enabling C. to go into possession before completion as tenant at will. The house, like the others on the estate, was fitted with a particular make of boiler, which was placed in the kitchen & was heated by a Bunsen gas burner. Above the kitchen was a bathroom. From a cupboard in the bathroom a linen chute ran down to a cupboard in the kitchen connected with the boiler by a pipe. There was no flue to carry gas or fumes from the burner to the outward air. C. with his wife & child went into occupation on Sept. 28. The C. Gas Co.'s inspector examined the gas fittings & set the regulator fitted to the burner so that 45 cubic feet of gas & no more passed into the burner per hour. On Oct. 26, C. & his wife were found dead in the bathroom, poisoned by carbon monoxide gas. A few days afterwards the regulator was found so set that much more than 45 cubic feet could pass into the burner in an hour. The boiler with its burner & the linen chute were parts of the realty. The boiler with the burner properly regulated was not dangerous. It was the business of the Gas Co. & not that of the builders to regulate the flow of gas to the burner. In an action under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), by the administrators of C. & his wife against the builders:—Held: there was no evidence of a breach of any duty which the law cast upon defts. as vendors or lessors of the house towards C. or his wife, & plffs. could not recover.—*BOTTOMLEY v. In this particular case, however, the ct. held that though the tenant was liable for the rent the landlord had, by causing the tenant to leave the flat, broken the covenant for quiet enjoyment & was liable to the tenant in damages for such breach.—*CRUSE v. It appeared that pltf.'s agent when asked about the condition of the premises told deft. that they were "all right," whereupon deft. agreed to rent the premises. Soon after taking possession he found that the common house bug had established itself in the premises & after complaint to pltf. the premises were fumigated with hydrocyanic acid gas on the order of the City Council. The bugs soon returned & deft. terminated his tenancy. Some of his furniture had become infested with bugs & had to be destroyed & the claim was for its value & certain other expenses:—Held: on the evi-

He based his claim on the alleged failure of the landlords to perform their statutory obligations under Housing Act, 1925, to keep the house "in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation" &, alternatively, under Increase of Rent & Mtge. Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, to keep the house in "good & tenantable repair":—Held: (1) whatever was the effect of the above mentioned Acts upon a landlord's responsibility for the condition or state of repair of houses coming within the scope of those Acts, upon which, as applied to the facts, the ct. was not unanimous, it was a condition precedent to the liability of the landlord that notice of latent, as well as of patent, defects should be given to him by the tenant, whether or not the landlord had a right of access to inspect the state of repair of the house, & the absence of such notice was fatal to pltf.'s claim. sf. General rules.]—Whether an article has become in law affixed to land or not is to be determined in the same way as between vendor & purchaser, mtgor. & mtgee. or landlord & tenant, but a tenant has the right as against his landlord to detach & remove trade or ornamental fixtures installed by him, during or at the expiration of his term. If an article is embedded in the soil or is attached to any building or permanent erection thereon by a permanent fastening, it is primâ facie a fixture. Unless so attached, an article is not regarded as "embedded" in the soil merely because it is placed on a brick, concrete or wood foundation, or even in holes constructed in the foundation to receive it, or because it sinks accidentally into the foundation, or because earth or other matter accidentally accumulates round it so as to give it the appearance of being embedded. A bolt carried from shafting to a machine for the purpose of working it is not in itself sufficient to make the machine a fixture. The connection of a hydraulic press with underground water-pipes, or the insertion of the nozzle of a bellows in a hole which it tightly fits in some part of a forge affixed to the premises, is sufficient to make the press, or the bellows, primâ facie a fixture. If an article is proved, primâ facie, to be a fixture, the onus of showing that it was intended to continue a chattel lies on those who contend that it is a chattel. The relevant evidence to prove the intention is the circumstances of the case, & mainly the degree of annexation & the object of annexation. Declarations of intention by the party who affixed the article are not relevant. An article which is no further attached to the premises than by its own weight is primâ facie not a fixture, but it will be held to be a fixture (a) if it is part of a machine or other article which is a fixture; (b) if it can be inferred from the circumstances that it was intended to become a part of the freehold. If an article which is fixed is taken out of its place by a mtgor., & an equally good or better article is substituted for it, the mtgee. is not entitled to claim both articles as fixtures; he must elect which he will have.—Re MAY BROS., LTD. (1929), S. 3219a. —.]—The lessee of a flat, which he held for a term of twenty-one years, without the consent of the lessor installed in some of the rooms certain valuable antique panelling, ornamental chimney-pieces & so-called "period" fireplaces. No portion of the structure of these rooms was altered in order to fix the panelling, but it was placed in position by inserting into the walls wooden plugs to which it was attached by screws. Some slight structural alteration was effected in fixing the new chimney-pieces & fireplaces. The lessee having died during the currency of the term, his exors. claimed the right to remove the panelling, chimney-pieces & fireplaces, alleging that these installations were tenant's fixtures, & as such removable by them. The lessor, on the other hand, contended that the panelling & chimney-pieces had been fixed & installed in such a way as to become part of the structure of the demised premises; that their removal would cause damage to the structure; that the installations by the lessee constituted landlord's fixtures, & that his exors. were not entitled to remove them. In an action by the lessor to restrain the exors. from removing the fixtures:—Held: (1) in determining whether a particular chattel was a tenant's or a landlord's fixture the ct. had to consider what were the object & purpose of the annexation, & what would happen if the annexed chattel were removed. So long as the chattel could be removed without doing irreparable damage to the demised premises, neither the method of attachment nor the degree of annexation, nor the quantum of damage that would be done either to the chattel itself or to the demised premises by the removal, had any bearing on the right of the tenant to remove it, except in so far as it threw a light upon the question of the intention with which the tenant affixed the chattel to the demised premises; (2) the ct. could not infer an intention on the part of the tenant that the fixtures in question should become part of the demised premises, but the proper inference to be drawn was that the tenant intended himself to enjoy them & not to benefit the demised premises. Therefore the fixtures were tenant's fixtures, & the exors. were entitled to remove them.—SPYER v. PHILLIPSON, [1931] 2 Ch. 183; 100 L. J. Ch. 245; 144 L. T. 626; 74 Sol. Jo. 787, C. A.

so. Theatre seats.—Evidence showed that certain seats were necessary for the use of a theatre as a theatre; it could not have been opened without them. At first they were put up hurriedly, & were fixed to the floor with brads; later they had to be re-arranged. They were then placed in rows, each row being connected with a horizontal rod. These rows stood on the sloping portion of the floor, which inclined very slightly, to the extent of 4½ degrees. In the middle of these rows a space was left for some sixty armchairs. The grouping of the rows of tip-up seats had a direct relation to the means of entrance to & exit from the theatre. Each individual seat was held in position by screws, which passed through the flanges at the foot of the standards of the seats, there being nine screws holding each pair of seats to the floor. The theatre was sometimes used for dances, but on such occasions the arm-chairs only were removed & it was not necessary to alter the position of the seats which had been screwed down as already described. In an action by pltf. claiming from def. the delivery of such seats or damages for their detention:—Held: giving judgment for def., upon the evidence, the tip-up seats had been sufficiently affixed to the freehold to cast upon pltf. the onus of showing that they remained chattels, & that, pltf. having failed to discharge this burden of proof, the seats must be regarded as fixtures, & must be judged to be the property of def.—*COLLEDGE v. of the premises. In an action for arrears of rent, deft. pleaded that he had been evicted from part of the premises by the London County Council on the default of plffs., & that such eviction constituted eviction by title paramount. Alternatively he pleaded that the eviction was due to the act or default of plffs. in permitting the premises to become dangerous, &/or in omitting to remedy the dangerous condition of the premises, &/or in failing in breach of statutory duty to comply with the dangerous structure notices & demolition orders, & he pleaded that the lease was frustrated. Deft. counterclaimed an apportionment & reduction of the rent payable & damages for breach of plffs.' covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held: (1) there was no eviction of deft. by title paramount; (2) there was no frustration of the lease; (3) there had been no breach of plffs.' covenant for quiet enjoyment, & deft. was liable for the full amount of the rent.—POPULAR CATERING ASSOCN., LTD. v. The measurements stated in this lease were made by officers of the Department of Public Works & the contract & plans accompanying the same were prepared by them. It was claimed by suppliant, concurrently with the execution of the lease, that the superficial area mentioned in the lease was in error & should be greater & that the total rental based thereon should be accordingly increased. It was agreed between the parties that the area leased was improperly measured, & thereupon a second or amending Order in Council was passed recognizing that an error had been made in stating the area in square feet leased & authorising the amending of the first Order in Council accordingly. No new contract, however, was executed in conformity with this amending Order in Council. The Crown took possession under the lease, & later, before its termination, rescinded the several Orders in Council, vacated the premises & returned the keys, & repudiated its obligation to be bound under the lease. Suppliant then notified the Crown that it would hold it responsible for the rent for the balance of the term, but that it would endeavour to rent the space vacated on the Crown's account, & would give the Crown credit for any sums so received:—Held: the acts of the suppliant did not constitute eviction of the Crown from the leased premises, & the Crown was liable for the rent for the entire term of the lease.—*JOURNAL PUBLISHING CO., LTD. v. The sub-sect. does not entitle a cestui que trust to distrain for rent in respect of the trust property merely because he is beneficial owner of that property.

J. N. sublet to pltf. part of certain premises which he himself held under a long lease. J. N. then executed a declaration of trust by which he declared that he held the property in trust for J. N., Ltd. Pltf. having fallen into arrear with his rent, J. N., Ltd., distrained. In an action for illegal distress:—Held: J. N., Ltd., were not entitled to distrain.—SCHALIT v. 4161a. ———. Landlord under covenant to repair.]—A landlord covenanted in an underlease to keep the outside walls & roofs in tenantable repair as he was required by the head lease to do. The covenant in the head lease contained an exception of damage by fire & fair wear & tear. The tenant complained that the landlord had not in accordance with such covenant repaired certain glass roofs & skylights. The landlord contended that: (a) the want of repair complained of was within the exception; (b) the glass roofs were fixtures & therefore within a covenant by the tenant to repair the interior & all fixtures; (c) the tenant being in arrear with his rent could not sue upon the covenant to repair:—Held: (1) the repair here was not within the exception. Where there is a failure to repair defects due to fair wear & tear, the consequences which ensue because the defects grow & spread cannot always be said to be due to fair wear & tear; (2) the glass roofs were not fixtures but part of the building itself. 4094 i. General rule—Letting into full possession necessary.]—Where there is no dispute as to the identity of a lease but the tenant denies that he has got possession of them, it is for the landlord to prove that he has discharged his obligation to put the tenant in possession before he can enforce the tenant's obligation to pay rent. The landlord must show not only that the tenant is in possession but that the possession is attributable to the lease, or might be so. That onus cannot be satisfied where, before rent has been paid, the sisters of the tenant, as heirs of their father, have obtained a decree against the landlord declaring their right to possession of their appropriate share in the property according to Mahomedan law.

Cases are distinguishable where the tenant has already paid rent under the lease, or where the tenant alleges, & the landlord denies, that certain subjects, of which possession has not been given, were within the subjects let; in cases of that nature the onus is primarily on the tenant.—JOSEPH CHANDRA ROY v. Tenant's rent paid before sub-tenant's.]—A sub-tenant of certain premises had, by May 4, 1931, paid the Sched. A. income tax for 1930–31 in respect of those premises of which his immediate landlords, pltf's., were lessees from defts., the lessors, under a lease terminating in Dec. 1931. The sub-tenant's half-yearly rent was payable on June 24, 1931, but he did not in fact pay it to pltf's. until July 1, 1931, when, as he was entitled to do in accordance with the provisions of r. 1 of No. VIII. of Sched. A. of the Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), he deducted from his rent payable to pltf's. the Sched. A. tax that he had paid in May. Pltf's., who were liable to their lessors, defts., in the same sum for rent as they received from their sub-tenant, in fact paid on June 23, 1931, the rent due from them to defts. on June 24, 1931, without deduction of the Sched. A. income tax. The payment of rent due on June 24, 1931, was the last that pltf's. had to make to defts. under the lease, & there was therefore no future payment of rent from which, in accordance with the provisions of Income Tax Act,

The $100 was so deposited & was retained by the lessor. The lessee never occupied the premises. The lessor sued for five years' rent from said Sept. 23, or, alternatively, for damages for breach of the lease:—Held: the agreement was understood by the parties to mean & should be construed as meaning that if deft. failed to occupy the premises he forfeited the said deposit of $100 & that was the end of the whole matter, i.e., the agreement was satisfied by the forfeiture of the said sum of $100.—*PITT-CROSS v. After the termination of said arrangement & of the agency contract the agent left the goods in pltf.'s barn for over a year. During nearly the whole of this period deft. was unaware of pltf.'s interest in the barn, & at the termination of the agency contract the agent was indebted thereunder to deft. Pltf. sued for a certain sum as rent or as mesne profits or as compensation for use & occupation:—Held: in view of the creditor & debtor relationship between the agent & deft., & the lack of privity between pltf. & deft., it was too late for pltf. to put forward a claim that deft. was indebted to him or was liable to him for rent, compensation or damages.—*ARMSTRONG v. The issue was decided in favour of pltf., & judgment was entered in pltf.'s favour & no appeal taken. No notice to quit was given, & there was no surrender of the premises, & no acceptance of surrender, & no resumption of possession by pltf.:—Held: dismissing deft.'s appeal with costs, pltf. was entitled to recover for rental of the premises for the time subsequent to the recovery of the previous judgment.—*GANNON v. 1918 (c. 40), they could deduct tax. When plffs. in July received their tenant's rent less the tax, they sought to recover that sum as tax deductible from the rent which they had paid to defts. in June:—Held: plffs. had no cause of action to recover the amount of the tax because they did not come within the second proviso to Sched. A., No. VIII., r. 4 (1), in that there had been no tax "actually paid" by them as stipulated by the proviso as a condition of recovery. On June 23, 1931, when plffs. paid their rent their sub-tenant had not paid his to them & had not deducted the tax as against them at that date, & therefore it could not be said that plffs. had actually paid the tax when they paid their rent.—*BRITISH PHOTOMATON TRADING CO., LTD. v. 4375b. Effect of repairs allowance.—Under No. VIII., r. 4, of Sched. A. of the Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), a person paying rent or any other annual sum to a landlord, owner, or proprietor charged with tax under the Sched. is entitled to deduct & retain thereout the income tax thereon for the period covered by the payment (the just proportion of any sums allowed by the Comrs. being first deducted) & every person to whom such payment is to be made is to allow the deduction. The lessors of premises let at £550 per annum, but sublet at higher rents, & assessed for income tax at £730, claimed that under the above rule the lessees were bound to deduct £47 10s., being the "just proportion" of an allowance under a covenant to execute repairs, from the quarterly instalment of rent before deducting income tax thereon, & that income tax could be deducted only from the balance:—Held: this claim was incorrect & was expressly contrary to Sched. A., No. VIII., r. 11. The tenant was entitled to deduct the tax from the full amount of the rent. The repairs allowance referred to in rule 4 is to be deducted not from the rent but from the tax.—EGYPTIAN HOUSE PROPERTIES v. MAYNARDS, LTD., [1934] Ch. 681; 103 L. J. Ch. 331; 151 L. T. 496; 50 T. L. R. 367; 78 Sol. Jo. 349.

Agreement altering incidence of tax—What amounts to.—A landlord & a tenant entered into a preliminary agreement for a lease of certain premises for £90 per week, the tenant to pay all taxes, including land taxes. Prior to the execution of the lease the lessor discovered that the provision that the tenant was to pay land tax was contrary to the terms of Federal & State Land Tax Acts. The landlord then required that the lease should provide for a rent of £100 per week, & promised that he would make a voluntary annual allowance to the lessee of an amount equal to the difference between the amount of the Federal & State land tax paid by the lessor in respect of the premises & £520, the latter sum being the annual amount of £10 per week. The lease was then executed, stipulating for a rent of £100 per week:—Held: the above facts did not disclose a "contract, agreement or arrangement" of altering the incidence "of any land tax within Land Tax Act Assessment Act, 1910-1926, s. 63, or Land Tax Act, 1915, s. 68.—Re LUCKS, LTD., [1928] V. Covenant to pay "any future land tax—Bridge rate."—By a lease dated Nov. 30, 1909, appnts. demised certain business premises in Sydney to resps., who thereby covenanted to pay all rates, taxes & outgoings, parliamentary, municipal, local, or otherwise imposed or to be imposed upon the premises or payable by the owner or occupier in respect thereof, landlord's property tax or land tax only excepted. Appnts., as lessors, signed a memorandum dated Mar. 31, 1910, under seal, which recited that it should be read with the lease, & thereby agreed to pay "the land tax at present assessed & any future land tax or municipal tax upon the unimproved capital value." Sydney Harbour Bridge Act of 1922, enacted by the Parliament of New South Wales, provided for the erection of a high level bridge across Sydney Harbour, two-thirds of the expense to be borne by the Exchequer of the State, & one-third to be paid out of the proceeds of "a rate leviable yearly of one half-penny in the pound upon the unimproved value of" (inter alia) "all lands within the city of Sydney & rateable under Sydney Corporation Act, 1902." By sect. 10 the Sydney Council were required to collect the rate & pay the proceeds to a special account at the Treasury:—Held: resps. in refusing to pay the bridge tax had not committed a breach of covenant as the bridge tax was a land tax being a tax on land directly imposed by the Legislature of the State, & the fact that the area of the tax was limited to the city of Sydney & certain specified shires was immaterial; therefore the bridge tax was within the meaning of the memorandum & payable by appnts. as lessors.—*MORRIS LEVENTHAL v. summer at a rent of £400 a year, payable in advance at the rate of £100 on each quarter day, contained a covenant by the lessors that, in case the total sum paid by the tenant in any one year of the term in respect of rates & taxes should exceed £125, the lessors would, on production of the relative receipts, refund to the tenant the difference between the total sum paid by him & £125. If this difference were not refunded by the lessors within fourteen days of demand the tenant was to be at liberty to deduct such difference from the next instalment of rent. The lease contained a covenant by the tenant that he would duly

The tenant in a year of the tenancy between midsummer & midsummer paid three half-years' rates, amounting in all to over £125, & having demanded the refund of the excess from the landlords, & having failed to get payment of the same within fourteen days of the demand, deducted it from his next instalment of rent:—Held: under the landlords' covenant to refund, the tenant was entitled to make the deduction.—*SOWERBY v. Resp. leased to applt. a property situated in the city of Montreal; & the lease contained, inter alia, the following stipulation under the heading "Conditions": ". . . the lessee binds itself . . . to pay all taxes, assessments & rates general & special which may be imposed on or in respect of the said property. . . ." The parties submitted a stated case, under Art. 509 et seq. C. C. P., as to whether "applt. (was) liable for the payment of . . . church assessment under the provisions of the lease"—Held: the church assessment provided for in the Parish & Fabrique Act, R. S. Q., 1925, of which the material provisions are outlined in the judgment of the ct., is one of the "taxes, assessments or rates" in respect to which the parties have stipulated in the above clause of the lease; & further, such assessment is a tax in respect of the property leased to applt. by resp.—MCKESSON & ROBBINS, LTD. v. 4575a. Water system.—Defts. demised to pltf. a flat on the fourth floor of certain premises. The lease contained a covenant that the lessee would permit the lessors, or their agents, or others, to enter upon the premises demised for the purpose (inter alia) of seeing to & repairing any defects in the water-pipes or watercourses passing through the premises or communicating with or affecting other parts of the building. Another covenant was in the following terms: "[The lessors] will keep the exterior of the premises, & all parts of the building, including halls, staircases, & passages not the subject of this or some other letting in good repair." At a higher level than the flat let to pltf. was a boxroom, under the roof & on the outside of which water was conveyed in an open gutter into a lead trough, & thence into another lead trough, & ultimately into a downfall pipe. The boxroom, gutter, troughs, & pipes were not the subject of the above or any other letting, & remained under defts.' control. A young dead pigeon got into the water system & was eventually carried into the downfall pipe. This caused a serious obstruction & overflow of water through the ceiling of the flat let to pltf. & damage was caused thereby. Pltf. claimed as against defts. damages for breach of covenant &, alternately, damages for negligence:—Held: the covenant to keep the exterior of the premises in good repair extended to the water system, & there had been a breach of that covenant, defts. being none the less liable, though they might show that the cause of the defect was fortuitous & beyond their control.

Semble: defts., as the persons in charge & control of the water supply, apart from any contractual duty, were under a common law duty as occupiers of adjacent premises to take reasonable care to prevent the escape of water, & on the facts found would have been liable in tort for negligence.—BISHOP v. 4828a. ———.]—E. was the tenant of part of certain premises under a lease for a term of 98 years, & he sublet that part to B. for the unexpired residue of that term less the last 15 days. E.'s superior landlord then let to B., for a term of 999 years, the whole of the premises, subject to E.'s interest in the part. B., in breach of a covenant in his sublease, made considerable structural alterations to the whole of the premises, which B. used for the purpose of running an hotel. E. brought an action against B. for breach of the conditions in the sublease. The county ct. judge awarded E. £80 damages, which he assessed on the basis of the restoration work which would have to be done to that part of the premises in which E. had an interest, before E. could let that part to some other person. B. appealed:—Held: (1) the proper measure of damages was the diminution in the value of E.'s reversion due to B.'s breach of covenant, & not the cost of restoring the premises; (2) as B. was entitled to possession of the whole of the premises for 999 years, apart from E.'s reversion of part for 15 days, & B. had acquired possession of the whole of the premises for the unitary purpose of running an hotel, there was no evidence of diminution in the value of E.'s reversion & E. was entitled only to nominal damages.—ESPIR v. BASIL STREET HOTEL, LTD., [1936] 3 All E. R. 91; 80 Sol. Jo. 894, C. A.

4828b. Form of covenant.—Certain premises were leased by pl'tfs. to def't. co.'s assignors. The lessees covenanted to expend £500 per annum on repairs & decoration or to pay the lessors the difference between £500 & the amount actually expended. It was found as a fact that from 1933 to 1935 the lessees did not spend the stipulated sum. This action was brought by the lessors claiming damages for breach of covenant, or, alternatively, for money due on the covenant:—Held: (1) since the passing of Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 17 (1), a covenant in the above form is illegal; (2) this was not an action for money due, but one founded on breach of covenant. It was, therefore, by virtue of Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 18 (1), essential for the lessor to prove damage to the reversion. No such damage having been proved, the action ought to be dismissed.—OLYMPIA (LIVERPOOL), LTD. v. MOSS' EMPIRES, LTD., [1938] 3 All E. R. 166; sub nom. MOSS' EMPIRES, LTD. v. OLYMPIA (LIVERPOOL), LTD., 159 L. T. 206; 54 T. L. R. 956; 82 Sol. Jo. 564, C. A.

4838a. ———.]—Forfeiture of term—No set-off for appreciation in value by forfeiture.—A lessee having neglected to carry out the covenants in the lease as to painting & repairing the demised premises, was sued by the landlords for possession & damages for the breaches of covenant. No defence having been put in it was adjudged that the landlords had judgment for possession, & mesne profits & damages, to be assessed & certified by a master. The master assessed the damages at the amount by which the reversion in possession at the date of the forfeiture of the lease (namely, the date of the issue of the writ) was diminished by non-repair. The tenant, having claimed that he was entitled to set off the amount found by the master to be the difference between the value of the reversion in possession at the date of the forfeiture & the value of the reversion expectant on the expiration of the term if the lease had not been forfeited, the master refused the claim & decided that the tenant was not entitled to any set-off by reason of the acceleration of the reversion consequent upon the forfeiture. The tenant, relying on Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 18, appealed to the judge:—Held: there could be no set-off, & in assessing damages under the sect. in the circumstances of the case the ct. had to ascertain the actual value of the property in its unrepaid state at the date of re-entry & the value which the property would then have had if there had been no breach of covenant, & the amount of damage sustained by the landlords was the difference between the value of the property as it stood & the value it would have had if the tenant had carried out his obligations under the covenants in the lease.

The expression "whether immediate or not" in the above passage is, I think, explained by reference to the case of Joyner v. Weeks, [1891] 2 Q. B. 31, to which our attention has been called. A reversion may not be a reversion in possession (i.e., it may not be immediate) by reason of the freeholder having granted a reversionary lease, & in that case the reversionary lease is to be disregarded in assessing the damages. In my judgment what the ct. has to do in assessing damages under the section in the circumstances of this case is to ascertain the actual value of the property at the date of re-entry & the value which the property would then have had if there had been no breach of covenant; & the difference between these two values is the amount of the damages sustained by the landlord (that is to say) the difference between the value of the property as it stands & the value which it would have had in case the tenant had fulfilled his obligations under the covenants in the lease (LAWRENCE, L.J.).—*HANSON v. 4841b. ———.]—What is "reversion"—Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 18 (1).—Pl'tfs. & def't. were partners. One of the partnership assets was the lease of the premises on which the business was carried on, expiring on Mar. 25, 1930. On Oct. 7, 1929, the landlord granted to the three partners a reversionary lease for fourteen years from Mar. 25, 1930, at an increased rent. On Oct. 29, 1929, by an agreement made between the parties for dissolution of the partnership, it was provided that the partnership assets should be sold to the highest bidder of the three partners & proceeds divided, deft.'s share being one-half; also, that the date for completion should be Nov. 18, 1929, & that deft. should out of his share make certain payments, & should pay the rent under the lease, all rates, taxes & outgoings in respect of the premises, & "all trade debts & other liabilities whatsoever in respect of the said premises & business" down to the date fixed for completion, making these payments out of his share of the proceeds of sale. The agreement came before the ct. for construction, & it was declared that the phrase, "other liabilities whatsoever in respect of the said premises," included the liability in respect of damages which the landlord could, on Nov. 18, 1929, have recovered for breach of the repairing covenants in the lease. On an application for a decision whether at that date the damages recoverable by him in respect of non-repair were to be estimated on the basis of the depreciation in market value of the reversion expectant on the determination of the lease, or of that expectant on the determination of the reversionary lease:—Held: the "reversion" was the immediate reversion expectant on the lease, & the fact that a reversionary lease had been granted, to take effect at a date after the date for the assessment of damages, was immaterial.—TERRONI & NECCHI v. CORSINI, [1931] 1 Ch. 515; 100 L. J. Ch. 289; 145 L. T. 95.

4886a. "Executing repairs"—Cleaning flue.]—The ground floor of a larger building was demised to applt., who carried on business therein as a ct. dressmaker. Through the part so demised, but not forming part of the demise, there ran a flue which served the other parts of the building. The lease provided that applt. would "permit the lessor or his . . . agents & workmen . . . to enter the said premises . . . for executing repairs & alterations of or upon the other parts of the said message . . . making good all damage thereby occasioned." During the currency of the lease the lessor by his agents entered the demised premises for the purpose of cleaning the flue, & as a consequence of the work that was done a quantity of soot was scattered over applt.'s stock of dresses, thereby damaging them. On a claim in respect of this damage:—Held: (1) the cleaning of the flue was "executing repairs" within the meaning of the lease; (2) the words "making good all damage thereby occasioned" were not to be restricted to structural damage to the premises but were wide enough to cover damage to applt.'s stock-in-trade; (3) in assessing the quantum of damage regard must be had to the question whether the applt. had taken reasonable precautions for minimising the amount of damage.—*GREG v. the Rent Restriction Acts to £2 13s. 8d., the increases including the percentage allowed on the basis that the landlords were responsible for the whole of the repairs. The tenancy was oral, except so far as its terms were contained in the rent book, &, as the judge found, there was no contractual liability on either landlords or tenant to repair, though the rent book contained a clause reserving to the landlords the right to enter & do repairs if they thought fit. The defective condition of the shutter had been known to the tenant for a considerable time, & he had, as the judge found, informed the landlords of it. Pltf. brought her action against the landlords & the tenant, alleging a failure by both, or alternatively by one or the other, to keep the shutter in a secure condition so that it would not fall & injure passers-by. The tenant issued a third-party notice against his co-defts. claiming to be indemnified by them if he should be held liable to pltf. :—Held : (1) the landlords were not estopped by having increased the rent on the basis of their doing the repairs from denying that they were liable, as against the tenant, to repair. In the absence of any contractual liability, the landlords, though they might do, & in fact did, repairs, were not bound to do them, nor to indemnify the tenant if he were held liable for non-repair. The third-party proceedings therefore failed; (2) though the landlords were under no contractual liability to the tenant to repair, yet, having reserved the right to repair, there was a duty on them, arising from proximity, to prevent injury to persons using the highway from a nuisance on the premises of which they had knowledge, & that they were therefore liable to the pltf.; (3) the liability of the landlords did not exclude the liability of the tenant for a nuisance on premises occupied by him, & he also was liable to pltf.—*WILCHICK v. M. was lessee from deft. co. of a part of the building excluding the main roof. There was no contractual relation between pltfs. & deft. co. Some defective guttering fell from the main roof through the glass roof of pltfs.' kitchen, causing injury to them & to their property:—Held: (1) pltfs.' claim, if any, against defts. was for negligence, not nuisance; (2) deft. co. owed a duty to pltfs. to keep the guttering reasonably safe, & a breach of that duty having occurred with resultant damage, pltfs. were entitled to recover.—CUNARD v. a i. — To licensee.]—Pitts., husband & wife, lived in a two-room suite on the second floor of a rooming, or apartment, house owned by deft. The suite had been rented by deft. to the husband. The only means of access egress to & from the suite was by way of an outside balcony reached by steps at the middle thereof. The balcony was the possession & under the control of deft. Pitts. intending to make a social call on a friend living in another suite, walked along the balcony; & the male pitf. while chatting with his friend leaned against the railing. It gave way; the male pitf. fell to the ground; & his wife, whose hand had been on his shoulder, fell with him. Pitts. based their action for damages on tort. The trial judge found that the railing was in such a state of decay & disrepair as to constitute a concealed danger. He awarded both pitfs. damages. Deft. appealed:—Held: the appeal should be allowed. Both pitfs. were in respect to their use of that part of the balcony in front of the neighbouring suite mere licensees. Deft. did not know of the concealed danger.—POWER & POWER v. HUGHES, [1938] 2 W. W. R. 359.—CAN.

f i. — To licensee.—Pltf. employed by tenants in a building to remove debris fell down the elevator, owing to the defective condition of the elevator interlocking safety device, & to his own contributory negligence:—Held: he was a licensee with an interest & could recover against the landlord, his damages being apportioned under the Negligence Act.—*GILLINGHAM v. The rail was not repaired, but the tenant continued to occupy the house. Eight months later, in Aug. 1931, the rail, which had become looser, gave way while the tenant was using it, & in consequence she fell & sustained injuries:—Held: the tenant was not barred, by continuing to occupy the house, from recovering damages for her injuries from the landlord, in respect that her continued occupation did not infer acceptance by her of the risk arising from the defect, in view of its trivial nature & of the landlord's undertaking to repair it.—MULLEN v. DUNBARTON COUNTY COUNCIL, [1933] S. C. 380.—SCOT.

5069a. In named office "or in some other responsible insurance office to be approved by the lessor"—Duty of lessor.—A lease of a messuage for a term of ninety-nine years contained a covenant by the lessee to insure against fire in the following terms: "The lessee shall & will . . . insure & ever afterwards during the said term keep insured the said messuage . . . in the joint names of the lessee & lessor in the Law Fire Office or in some other responsible insurance office to be approved by the lessor. . . ." Resp., who was an assignee of the lease, did not continue the policy in the Law Fire Office which was in existence at the time of the assignment, but took out a policy in the Atlas Co. Applt., who was the ground landlord of the premises & also of a large number of other houses on the same estate, refused to approve of the Atlas Co. on the ground that for purposes of estate management he required that all houses upon his estate should be insured in the same office. Resp. declined to insure in the Law Fire Office, & insisted that under the covenant she had an option to insure either in the Law Fire Office or in some other responsible office to be approved by the lessor. In an action brought house & placed his chattels in it, the house was burnt down & with it pltf.'s chattels, the undertaking to repair & reshingle not having been fulfilled. The fire was caused by sparks from the chimney reaching the old shingles on the roof. Pltf., who had repeatedly warned deft. of the danger, sued in tort for the value of his chattels:

—Held: deft. was properly held liable. The rule requiring a tenant to minimise his loss by himself repairing at the expense of his landlord does not apply where the landlord acknowledges his undertaking & promises to fulfil it. By his agreement deft. assumed the duty of repairing within a reasonable time; & his neglect to do so after repeated warnings was negligence entitling pltf. to sue in tort.—AMELL v. MALONEY, [1929] 4 D. L. R. 514; 64 O. L. R. 285.—CAN.

n i. —.—.—.]—Where the owner of an hotel leased the premises, & pltf. fell through an opening in a verandah.—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover as against the owner, even if there were an express covenant by him to make outside repairs, as pltf. was a stranger to the covenant.—MARVILLE v. DONNELLY (1909), 14 O. W. R. 1044; 1 O. N. W. 195.—CAN.

n ii. —.—.—.]—Premises, the property of deft., were let to W. who let different portions to sub-tenants, including an upstairs room to D. The letting to W. was within Rent Restriction Act, N. L., 1925 (c. 12). Pltf., a district nurse, having visited D., descended the stairs, & whilst taking the last step on to the hall the floor gave way, & pltf. received serious injuries:—Held: pltf. could not succeed either in contract or the statutory obligation to repair implied in the letting, or in tort.—O'REILLY v. DOHERTY, [1923] N. L. 32.—IR.

ab. Bushes cut along river—Necessary for exercise of fishing rights.—Pltf., by indenture under seal, leased to deft. for a term of years, with the right to renew, pltf.'s land on the East River, G. County, for fishing purposes, with the right to enter & use the same in such a way as might be necessary for fishing in said river. Damages claimed by pltf. were for cutting bushes along the bank of the river:—Held: the burden of proof was upon pltf., & the right to fish from the bank of the river involved the right to do such cutting as was necessary for that purpose.—McKEEN v. FATTILLO (1927), 59 N. S. R. 452.—CAN.

ac. Cultivating waste land.—A lessee who cultivates waste land of the colony is not to be presumed to have done so with the concurrence of his lessor, & for his benefit.—NEWMAN v. GORF (1817), 1 Nfld. L. R. 26.—NFLD.

by the applt. against resp., in form for forfeiture of the lease of breach of covenant, but in effect, to obtain a decision of the ct. on the construction of the covenant:—Held: upon the true construction of the covenant, the primary obligation of the resp. was to insure in the Law Fire Office, & applt. had an absolute right to withhold his approval of an alternative office without entering upon reasons. Assuming, contrary to the decision of the House, that an implied term was to be imported into the contract that the lessor's approval was not to be unreasonably withheld, the grounds of applt.'s disapproval were reasonable.—TREDEGAR v. HARWOOD, [1929] A. C. 72; 97 L. J. Ch. 392; 139 L. T. 642; 44 T. L. R. 790, H. L.

5070a. Not to do anything to impose heavier insurance burden on premises—Obligation of lessor as to adjacent premises.—Lessees of factory premises for a term of twenty-one years covenanted to pay as additional rent such sums as the lessors might expend in effecting or maintaining the insurance of the demised premises against fire, & not to do or suffer anything on the demised premises which would render payable an increased or extra premium for the insurance of the demised premises or other premises adjacent thereto. The lessors covenanted to keep the demised premises insured against fire & that the lessees should have quiet enjoyment of them. Subsequently, the lessors let premises adjacent to the demised premises to another lessee, whose trade as a woodworker rendered it impossible for the insurance of the demised premises to be effected except at considerably increased premiums:—Held: (1) the lessors, by dealing with the adjoining premises in a way which was not unreasonable or unbusinesslike, which did not affect the originally demised premises physically & which had rendered it, not less easy or legal, but substantially more expensive to conduct on them the business for which they had been demised, had not so interfered with the purpose for which those premises had been demised as to have derogated from their own grant of them; (2) the covenant by the lessees not to do or suffer anything on the originally demised premises which would render payable an increased or extra premium for the insurance of those, or adjacent, premises did not impliedly put the lessors under a similar obligation with regard to their user of adjacent premises.—*O'CEDAR, LTD. v. ## Part XXI.—Assignment and Devolution of Leases.

"Not to assign, sublet, or part with the possession of the flat or any part thereof without the previous consent of the lessors or their agent, such consent to any assignment or sub-lease to an individual not to be unreasonably withheld on proof being furnished of the respectability & financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or subtenant. Provided always that the lessors may as a condition of such consent to any assignment or sublease require the proposed assignee or sublessee to enter into direct covenants with the lessors to perform & observe all the covenants on the tenant's part herein contained, & non-compliance with such condition shall be deemed to be a reasonable ground for refusing such consent notwithstanding the respectability & financial responsibility of the proposed assignee or underlessee." The tenant desired to sublet the flat to a respectable & responsible tenant at £450 a year, the best rent obtainable, but the landlords refused their consent except on the terms that the subtenant should enter into a direct covenant with them to pay the rent of £700 a year reserved by the lease:—Held: in the circumstances the landlords had unreasonably refused their consent to the subletting.—*BALFOUR v. 5522a. ———.—[The lease of certain property which the tenant used in connection with his business, contained a covenant against assigning without the landlords' consent. The tenant assigned his business to a limited co., agreeing to transfer to them all existing leases. A licence to assign the lease of the property was duly granted by the landlords, & the co. went into possession & for a time paid the rent to the landlords. No assignment of the lease was in fact completed. In an action against the co. for the recovery of rent, the co. contended that, being mere equitable assignees of the lease, there was no privity of contract between it & the landlords & it was not liable for the payment of the rent. The county ct. judge held that inasmuch as the landlords' consent was to the co. being in possession of the premises as assignees & not otherwise, the co. was on the facts estopped from denying that it was an assignee & liable for the rent. The co. appealed:—Held: there was evidence upon which the county ct. judge could rightly hold that the co. was so estopped.—RODENHURST ESTATES, LTD. v. BARNES, LTD., [1936] 2 All E. R. 3; 80 Sol. 5522b. ———.—[Pltfs., as owners of the fee simple of land subject to a lease, in an action to recover possession of a number of houses on the ground of forfeiture for breach of covenant to repair, alleged that deft. co. held the premises as assignees of the lease. Deft. co. denied that the lease was vested in it, & averred that it held the land referred to in the lease as underlessee & by virtue of an underlease for the term of the lease less 3 days, that there was no privity between it & pltfs., & that it could not be sued upon the covenants in the lease. Pltfs. contended that deft. co. was estopped from denying that it was the assignee of the lease, as deft. co. & its predecessor in title had, since 1888, paid to pltfs. & their predecessors in title the rent reserved by the lease & remained in possession, whereby pltfs. were induced to believe that deft. co. & its predecessors were assignees of the lease:—Held: (1) mere payment of rent & possession did not amount to a representation by deft. co. that it intended to induce pltfs. to believe that it was the assignee of the head lease; (2) as the payment of rent could be made by deft. co. either as lessees' agent or as underlessee or as assignee, the landlords were not entitled to abstain from inquiring & to assume for their own benefit that deft. co. was making the payments of rent as the assignee; (3) deft. co., therefore, was not estopped from denying that it was the assignee, although it was estopped from denying pltfs.' title to the land.—OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF CHARITY LANDS v. Deft. had meanwhile entered into possession. Deft. required pltf. to put the court into good order at once; but pltf. was only prepared to give an undertaking to do this at the end of the term. Deft. refused to accept this & thereupon vacated the premises, having been in possession about three months. In an action for specific performance pltf. contended that deft. by entering into possession with full knowledge that the covenant had not been observed had waived his right to object to the title:—Held: (1) deft. by entering into possession had not waived his right to require the court to be put in good repair; (2) pltf. had ample time to put the court in order before deft. vacated; (3) even if pltf. now put the court in good repair, he would not be entitled at this late stage to an order for specific performance.—RELLIE v. sm. Must be reasonable—Not necessarily determining lease at end of year of tenancy.—In the case of a lease not governed by Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 106, the notice to quit need not necessarily determine the lease at the end of the year of the tenancy, but it must be reasonable. It is, however, for the final ct. of fact, in each case, to determine what is reasonable notice.—DAMODAR PRASAD TEWARI v. LACHEMI PRASAD SINGH (1928), 1 L. R. 7 Pat. 496.—IND.

—A party occupied premises, under an agreement for three years, at £45 a year, which expired at Midsummer, 1826; he did not then go out, nor did his landlord take any steps to compel him, but at the Michaelmas following, gave him notice to quit at Ladyday, 1827, or pay the rent of £50 a year. He continued in, but refused to pay more than the £45 rent:—Held: under the circumstances, he must be taken to have acquiesced with the new proposal, & was bound to pay the rent of £50.—*ROBERTS v. sg. Notice in case of sale by lessor—Sufficiency.—A lease provided that if the lessor proposed to effect a sale of the premises he should first offer to sell the same to the lessee at the same price & on the same terms as he was willing to sell to any other purchaser. The next previous paragraph provided that in event of the lessor effecting a sale he should give the lessee a forty-five days' notice of termination of the lease. The lessor secured a purchaser & tentatively arranged for a sale. He therefore gave the lessee a forty-five days' notice of termination of the lease & by the same notice also offered to sell the premises at the same price & on the same terms "as he is willing to sell to another to whom he will sell in the event of your failing to within fifteen days from this date, inform him by writing of your being then ready & willing to purchase at the price & on the terms hereinafter contained." Then followed the complete terms on which he proposed to sell to another. The lessee refused to quit & the lessor took possession after the lapse of the forty-five days:—Held: the notice was sufficient & the lessee's claim for damages failed.—BRISCO v. HEIDE, [1935] 2 W. W. R. 429; 2 D. L. R. 407, 50 B. C. R. 161.—CAN.

xx. Effect of breach of other covenant.—Forfeiture for mere non-payment of rent on its due date has always been looked upon as a thing against which a ct. of equity should afford relief. With respect to an alleged breach of a covenant by the tenant to insure, held that, in view of the conduct of the parties in relation to the covenant 6308b. —.—Upon the marriage of A., the grandson of W., from whom A. had large expectations, certain property, amongst other things a house & lands, was settled upon A., & it was agreed that W., the grandfather, should occupy the house & lands, & also some glebe lands belonging to A. There was some evidence as to the rent that was to be paid, which was about the actual value. A. never enforced the rent during the eight years of his grandfather's occupancy, which ceased with his death, but had received various sums in money & goods equal to about half the alleged rent. The Vice-Chancellor allowed an exception to the Master's report allowing the rent as alleged. But the Lord Chancellor reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, coming to the conclusion that there was either an express contract to pay the alleged rent, or an agreement to occupy as any other tenant, & pay quantum meruit; the sums & goods paid to go towards the rent.—*ALINGTON v. 6342a. Notice requiring work not within covenant.—In 1877 a lease of two cottages was granted to deft.'s father to take effect on the death of pltf.'s father. On the death of deft.'s father intestate in 1898, the lease vested in his wife & upon her death in 1915 it vested by her will in the five children. Pltf.'s father died in 1926. By a family arrangement, deft. was allowed to live rent free in one of the cottages on condition that he kept both cottages in repair. In 1934 pltf. served a notice upon deft.'s brother, who was one of the lessees & who managed the family affairs, requiring him to do certain repairs under a covenant in the lease. No repairs were done & pltf. brought an action for possession. The county ct. judge found that some of the work required to be done was not repair work within the covenant & that other work was of a more expensive character than the covenant required, & he held that the notice was therefore not a good notice within Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 146, & he gave judgment for deft. Pltf. appealed:—Held: (1) the notice was not bad merely because it included work which pltf. was not entitled to require to be done under the lease; (2) the notice was bad because it was not served on all the lessees & the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Semble: the lease vested in the Public Trustee by virtue of Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), Sched. I., Part IV., para. 1 (4), & notice ought to have been served on the

The co., as lessor, after serving a schedule of dilapidations & two notices on B. & L., who were joint lessees, brought this action, by which they sought, against both defts., to recover possession of premises comprised in two leases. The leases contained full repairing covenants, which defts. had neglected to perform. Defts. originally appeared by the same solrs., & put in a defence signed by counsel on their behalf. But at the date of the hearing deft. L. appeared by another counsel instructed by another firm, while B. did not instruct solrs. but appeared in person. L. asked for relief against the forfeiture under sect. 146 (2); B. did not desire such relief, preferring to give up possession:—Held: relief against forfeiture, where there are joint lessees, cannot be granted on the application of only one of them.—*FAIRCLOUGH (T. On the facts as found deft. was from then until Oct. 23, 1930, trying by means other than action to put an end to the underlease, & on Oct. 23, 1930, the liquidator commenced these proceedings asking for (a) a declaration that the underlease was still on foot; (b) (alternatively) relief against forfeiture; & (c) a declaration that pltf. co. was at liberty to assign the premises comprised in the underlease to pltf. G. without obtaining deft.'s consent:—Held: by LUXMOORE, J., (1) on the facts the underlease had not been determined before the winding-up order; (2) the underlease was not a lease of mines or minerals or of property with respect to which the personal qualifications of the tenant were of importance for the preservation of the value or character of the property so as to bring the case within Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 146 (9); (3) the co.'s interest in the underlease had not been sold within one year from the winding-up so as to bring the case within sect. 146 (10) (a); (4) as the proceedings for relief had been commenced within a year of the beginning of the winding-up it was within the discretion of the ct. to grant relief from forfeiture on such terms as it thought fit, having regard to sub-sects. 2, 10 (b) of the sect., although the proceedings for relief did not come on for hearing till after the year had expired, & relief was granted on terms. There was no appeal from LUXMOORE, J.'s decision on the second & third points:—Held: by the COURT OF APPEAL, affirming the decision of LUXMOORE, J., on these points, (1) there had been no re-entry for nonpayment of rent by deft. before the date of the winding-up order; (4) the ct. had discretion under Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 146, to grant relief from forfeiture, as the case fell within sub-sect. 10 (b) of the sect., which on its true construction entitled the liquidator to apply for relief within a year of the winding-up, when the demised property had not been sold, & neither limited the relief given to that period nor made it necessary that the application should be heard within that period; & (5) relief had been granted on proper terms.—GEE v. 6636a. Substitution of licence or tenancy at will under purchase agreement—Rescission of agreement.]—By an agreement in writing dated Aug. 28, 1926, deft., the weekly tenant of a house to which Rent Restriction Acts applied, agreed to buy it from pltf., the landlord, for £900. The agreement provided that deft. acknowledged owing pltf. £63 10s. arrears of rent, & that pltf. would accept £50 in settlement; that, until certain mtges. had been transferred from pltf. to deft., pltf. should remain in absolute ownership of the premises; & that, until completion of the conveyance, deft., who was to remain in possession, should pay to pltf. interest on the £950 at the rate of 6 per cent. with interest on interest dating from Sept. 1, 1926. Deft. also agreed to pay certain deposits, pltf., on failure of such payments, to be entitled to rescind the agreement & enter into possession of the house. Deft. agreed to maintain the house in a good state of repair & to pay rates, taxes, & insurance. On Feb. 27, 1927, pltf. rescinded the agreement under the powers reserved in it, but deft. refused to give him possession of the house:—Held: (1) the effect of the agreement, as indicating the intention of the parties, was to determine the weekly tenancy, & to substitute for it either a licence or a tenancy at will, which, in its turn, was revoked or determined by the rescission of the purchase agreement, & deft. had no contractual right to resist the claim for possession; (2) deft. was not protected by Rent Restriction Acts, because after Aug. 28, 1926, deft. remained in possession of the house by virtue of the contract of purchase, & not as a statutory tenant, & under that contract she was either a licensee or a tenant at will, & after its rescission, if she had been a licensee, she was not a tenant who had held over under the Acts, & if she had been a tenant at will, her tenancy had been at no rent, & by Increase of Rent & Mtge. Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (7), it must be ignored, with the result that the house was to be treated as untenanted & pltf. had an unrestricted right to recover possession of it; (3) the rescission of the purchase agreement did not deprive pltf. of his right to the arrears of rent which had accrued due to him before the agreement was made, but it did destroy deft.'s right to enforce the agreement with pltf. to accept a less sum than that which was in fact owing.—*TURNER v. the police office, received the full amount due, & paid it at the estate office of the landlord, being given a receipt acknowledging payment by the county authority, which receipt he sent to the county treasurer. No demands for rates & taxes were made to deft. This course of business continued for fourteen years, deft. continuing to occupy the house & his name remaining on the estate books as tenant. There was no written surrender or assignment of the tenancy:—Held: (1) there was evidence from which the inferences of fact could be drawn that in 1912 deft. agreed with the landlord that he would forthwith surrender his tenancy, that the landlord agreed with deft. to accept the surrender & accept the chief constable as his tenant, & that the deft. would in future occupy the house as a servant of the chief constable & not as a tenant, & on those facts there had been a surrender of the tenancy by operation of law; (2) deft. was in the circumstances estopped from denying that he had surrendered or assigned the tenancy.—*METCALFE v. 6838a. Performance of covenants between giving notice & expiry of notice—Validity.—By a lease dated Dec. 31, 1925, pltf. demised certain buildings to defts. for a term of years at a yearly rent. The lease contained covenants by defts. that they would at all times during the term keep & at the expiration or sooner determination of the lease yield up the demised premises in substantial repair. The lease contained a proviso that if defts. should desire to determine the lease at the expiration of the first five or ten years of the lease & should give to the lessor six calendar months' notice in writing of such desire, & should, up to the time of such determination, perform & observe the covenants on their part, then immediately on the expiration of such five or ten years, as the case might be, the demise & everything therein contained should cease & be void, but without prejudice to the remedies of either party against the other in respect of an antecedent breach of covenant. On Aug. 17, 1929, defts. served pltf. with a notice in writing to determine the lease on Feb. 28, 1930. Pltf., having refused to recognise the validity of the notice on the ground that at the date thereof breaches of the repairing covenants remained unremedied by defts., brought this action claiming a declaration that the lease was still subsisting & binding on defts.:—Held: (1) the condition to perform the covenants in the lease upon which defts. were empowered to determine the lease was a condition precedent; (2) as the breaches, although they were unremedied at the date of the notice, had been remedied by the time the notice expired, the condition was fulfilled, with the result that the lease had been effectually determined.—*SIMONS v. The mtgor.

The mtgor. refused to give up possession:—Held: the term or interest of the mtgor. in the mortgaged property had been "duly determined by a legal notice to quit or otherwise" within above Act, & therefore, justices had power to issue a warrant to give possession of the property to the mtgees.—*DUDLEY & DISTRICT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. The landlords having failed to comply with their obligation under Housing Act, 1925 (c. 14), s. 1, to keep the cottage reasonably fit for habitation, a closing order was made in 1930 under the Act. In an action by the landlords for possession deft. counter-claimed for damages for loss of her tenancy & the county ct. judge gave her £25 damages:—Held: when the tenancy commenced in 1917, it could not have been within the contemplation of either the landlords or the tenant that in 1930 the tenant would have under the Rent Restriction Acts security of tenure which would prevent the landlords from determining the tenancy by a week's rent under Landlord & Tenant Act, 1927, R. S. O., does not apply to one holding over in good faith.—ORD v. PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF MITCHELL, [1936] 1 D. L. R. 540; O. R. 61.—CAN.

After making further payments amounting to $2,500, defts. were again in default, & pltf. applied for & obtained a writ of possession under the overholding sections of Landlord & Tenant Act.—Held: In a case so involved & in which if action had been brought relief against forfeiture might be considered, the section of Landlord & Tenant Act invoked did not apply; summary remedy should not be invoked except notice to quit; the question of damages must therefore be considered without regard to the Rent Restriction Act, & as the tenant had been given more than a week to vacate the premises she could recover no damages.—

7028a. Operation of Acts—In rem.]—Certain huts built by H.M. Office of Works in 1915 for munition workers became vacant in 1923. They were subsequently let to tenants. In 1928 the Crown sold the property to the W. Estates, Ltd., who leased the same to pltf. The rental value of the premises brought them within Rent Restrictions Act. Pltf. sought possession of the premises occupied by the two defts., whose tenancies commenced from Oct. 1924. The county ct. judge dismissed the claim, holding that the premises were controlled. Pltf. appealed. The case was argued on the footing that the Acts did not bind the Crown. It was also admitted that the Crown had vacant possession after July 31, 1923:—Held: both appeals must be allowed. The Crown was not bound by Rent Restrictions Acts, otherwise there was no necessity for 1920 Act, s. 12 (10). The Rent Restrictions Acts operated in rem & not in personam, & so if the principal Act did not apply to the premises, the Act of 1923 also did not apply. There must, therefore, be an order for possession in both cases.—CLARK v. DOWNES, CLARK v. MAWBY (1931), 145 L. T. 20; 29 L. G. R. 571. D. C.

The Rent Restriction Acts did not apply, because those Acts did not affect the Crown. Subsequently, in 1928, the Crown sold the premises to defts. subject to pltf.'s tenancy at the same rent of 7s. 6d. per week. The Acts then applied to the premises except during the continuance of pltf.'s original tenancy. In 1929 defts. gave pltf. notice to quit with an alternative, in the same document, of an increase of the rent to 10s. 6d. per week, being the permitted increase on the basis of a standard rent of 9s. 6d., at which rent the premises had been in fact first let to pltf. :—Held : (1) the words "first let" in Increase of Rent & Mtge. Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (a), meant first let in fact without reference to the Rent Restriction Acts, &, therefore, the premises were first let in 1916, & the statutory rent was consequently 9s. 6d. per week ; (2) the rent of the premises after the sale by the Crown, 7s. 2d. & 10s. 6d. per week, was not a "progressive rent" within the above sect., a progressive rent being a rent under one single tenancy which automatically rises during the continuance of that tenancy. The above rents were payable under different tenancies ; (3) the notice to quit was good, there being no reason why the notice terminating the tenancy & the notice to increase the rent should not be on the same piece of paper.—*WHEELER v. 7055 i. Shop.]—Premises in a country town were let to a tenant under a single contract of lease, & at an unapportioned rent of less than £70. The subjects consisted of a dwelling-house, & of a room used as a shop, & constructed to serve that purpose. The house & the shop had separate entrances from the street, but there was internal communication between them. The landlord having brought an action of removing from the shop:—Held: the unit of location was a complex one consisting in part of a dwelling-house & in part of a shop, the latter was not part of the dwelling-house, & accordingly Increase of Rent & Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, did not apply to it; & decree of removing granted.—*M'CORMY'S TRUSTEES v. to increase the rent, the tenant claimed to be protected under the Rent Restriction Acts:—Held: as the tenant dwelt in the house & had a right to dwell there, the house was a dwelling-house, & the fact that part of it was used for business purposes did not prevent it being a dwelling-house to which 1920 Act, s. 12 (2), applied.—*HICKS v. 7063a. Separate use of part as business premises—Other part sub-let.—A house & shop were let to a tenant in 1900. The house consisted of two rooms in the basement, a shop & parlour on the ground floor, two rooms on the first floor & two rooms on the second floor. The tenant originally carried on a tailor's business in the shop & resided in the house with his family. Subsequently he ceased to carry on the tailor's business & his daughter carried on a drapery business on the ground floor, & his son carried on a betting business on the first floor. In 1927 the tenant moved to another house where he resided with his family; he then sub-let the two rooms in the basement to one sub-tenant as a residence, and the two rooms on the second floor to another sub-tenant as a residence. The landlord served notice to quit upon the tenant, & then commenced proceedings in the county ct. to recover possession of the premises. The tenant relied upon the protection given by Rent Restriction Acts. The county ct. judge found as a fact that the ground floor & the first floor constituted business premises, & that the tenant had sub-let the remainder of the premises & so parted with possession of them. He accordingly held that the tenant was not entitled to the protection of Rent Restriction Acts & gave judgment for the landlord for possession:—Held: an order could be made for the recovery by the landlord of possession of the whole of the premises, notwithstanding that the basement & second floor had been sub-let to two tenants as residences, those sub-tenants being protected by 1920 Act, s. 5 (5) & s. 15 (3), & becoming tenants of the landlord.—HASKINS v. LEWIS, [1931] 2 K. B. 1; 100 L. J. K. B. 180; 144 L. T. 378; 95 J. P. 57; 47 T. L. R. 195; 29 L. G. R. 199, C. A.

The tenant did not herself occupy the dwelling-house or any part of it, but sublet the ground floor furnished, & the basement unfurnished, to sub-tenants whose occupation ceased shortly before the end of the tenancy:—Held: 1920 Act was not prevented from applying to the dwelling-house, so as to entitle the tenant to rely upon sect. 2 (3), because (1) the tenant took & used the dwelling-house only for the purpose of subletting it, inasmuch as the taking & user of premises only for that purpose did not make them business premises to which the Act did not apply; (2) the tenant did not herself occupy the dwelling-house, & her sub-tenants ceased to occupy it before the end of the tenancy; (3) the tenant had sublet the ground floor furnished to sub-tenants, who ceased to occupy it before the end of the tenancy.—*EBNER v. certain offices at a rent of £20, the ratable value of the garden & offices being less than one-quarter of that of the house. On the expiry of the farm tenancy at Martinmas 1923, the landlord let to the subtenant the house, garden, & offices, with the steading & farmyard, at a rent of £35. The ratable value of the garden, offices, steading, a farmyard was more than one-quarter of that of the house:—Held: as the value of the land & other premises let with the house since Martinmas 1923 exceeded one-quarter of that of the house, 1920 Act did not apply to the subjects, the addition of the farmyard & steading having altered the identity of the house, & thus elided sect. 12 (6) of the Act.—*HALDANE v. In support of his claim he produced a copy of the following entry appearing in the quinquennial valuation list for 1930 with respect to the premises: "ground floor exempt, rooms on first floor are of gross value £16, rateable value £12 " :—Held: the tenant had failed to show that the house was still controlled: the onus of showing that the rateable value was less than £45 a year was on him: & he had not discharged that onus by putting in evidence an entry in the valuation list showing that part of the premises was exempted from rates & that the remaining part was rated at less than £45 a year.—*WHITE v. The sub-tenants were given by the tenant the right as against herself to exclusive possession of the rooms in question. On becoming aware of the sub-letting the landlord of the house gave notice to terminate the tenancy, & thereafter took proceedings to recover possession of the rooms which had been sub-let:—Held: the rooms which had been sub-let had by virtue of sect. 12 (2) of 1920 Act become separate dwelling-houses to which the Act did not apply & therefore the landlord was entitled to recover possession of those rooms.—*BARRELL v. 7103e. ———.]—(1) For a considerable period before 1919 deft. was tenant & occupier of a dwelling-house at N., which came within Rent Restriction Acts. In 1919 he went to live at a house in another locality of which house his wife was tenant. By permission of deft. a sister of his wife, with her husband then went to reside in the house at N. In May, 1930, notice to quit the premises at N. was served by pltf., the landlord, on deft., who thereby became statutory tenant of the premises. In June, 1930, deft.'s sister-in-law left the premises, & deft. permitted his sister to live in them. In an action brought by pltf. against deft. for possession of the house, the county ct. judge found that deft. was not in actual occupation of the house at the material time & that he did not retain possession within Rent Restriction Acts by the occupation of his wife's or his own relations, since the purpose of that occupation was not to preserve the house as a residence for himself. The county ct. judge accordingly made an order for possession of the house, & this order was affirmed by the Div. Ct. On appeal:—Held: the appeal should be dismissed on the ground (per SCRUTTON & SLESSER, L.JJ.) the fundamental principle of the Rent Restriction Acts being to protect a tenant who is residing in a house, a tenant, to be entitled to the protection of the Acts, must be in personal occupation or actual possession of the premises in respect of which he seeks that protection, & (per GREER, L.J.) the findings of the county ct. judge involved that deft. had sub-let the house & so was, by virtue of 1923 Act, s. 4 (h), precluded from claiming to retain possession.

(2) In my view Collis v. Flower, No. 7105, was wrong, for the reasons that I have been stating. The common law tenancy was terminated. The exor. had a common law tenancy, & it was terminated by notice to quit. He did not remain in occupation of the house, &, in my view, the original tenant having no right, as we have now decided, to

Subsequently the Union sub-let one of the rooms to a shoemaker, who used the room solely for the purposes of his trade. Pltf. obtained a decree in ejectment against the Union & recovered possession of the room occupied by them. He then brought ejectment proceedings against the sub-tenant in respect of the room occupied by him. The sub-tenant relied on Increase of Rent & Mtge. Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923:—Held: deft. was protected by the Act, as, whether the Union was using the rooms "for business, trade, or professional purposes" or not, plff. was the "landlord" of the room & deft. the "tenant," & the latter used the room for business premises.—O'BRIEN v. dispose of the property by will, had no right to give any statutory right to the exor., & the exor., who had not lived in the house, could not claim to be a statutory tenant. In my view, therefore, Collis v. Flower, No. 7105, is no longer an authority.

The administrator case stands on a different footing, because one has to look in all these cases to see what the facts were. The administrator case is the case of Mellows v. Low, No. 7097. There the facts were different. The original tenant was a weekly tenant. It was a common law tenancy, & during her tenancy she died intestate. Consequently, whatever rights she had in her common law tenancy remained to her representatives in an intestacy. No notice to quit was ever given. Consequently the common law tenancy remained. Then the landlord claimed that on the death of the tenant intestate, with no member of her family residing in the house, the tenancy lapsed. It was held that the administratrix was a person who derived title under the original tenant, & consequently, that the residence could not be interfered with. The point of that case which renders it a right decision is that no notice to quit the common law tenancy had ever been given. The common law tenancy, therefore, remained, & it remained in the person who at common law was entitled to it, & her tenancy had never been terminated. Consequently Mellows v. Low, No. 7097, on the facts, is right, but if notice to terminate the common law tenancy had been given the ct. could not, in my opinion, have said, unless the matter could be brought within the very curious clause about intestacy to which I have referred, that such an administratrix not being in possession is entitled to be protected by the Act (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—*SKINNER v. 7145a. What amounts to increase.]—By a local Act, the rates in S. were consolidated & became a comprehensive borough rate. In May 1927, by virtue of the Act, which provided that in certain cases owners might be rated instead of occupiers, the city council passed a resolution transferring the liability for the rate as regards premises of which the ratable value did not exceed £10. The resolution took effect on Oct. 5, 1927. The rate, which the owners became liable to pay, was calculated on the basis of nine-tenths of the amount in the pound of the full consolidated rate previously payable by the occupier. The landlords of certain premises of a ratable value not exceeding £10 claimed that they were entitled to increase the rent of one of their tenants, under 1920 Act, by the amount of the full consolidated rate previously payable by the tenant:—Held: under sect. 2 (1) (b), the landlords were entitled to increase the rent, as there had been an increase in the amount of the rates for the time being payable by the landlords over the corresponding amount paid by them in the period specified by the sect.; but the amount of the permitted increase was an amount equivalent to nine-tenths of the full consolidated rate, & not the full amount of that rate.—*HODGKINSON v. Subsequently the tenant of one part became tenant of the whole house at 17s. a week, & the landlord gave him notice to increase the rent under 1920 Act, s. 3 (2). Resp. having become tenant of the whole house, desired to sublet the lower part, as had been done previously, & he sublet to applt. at a rent of half the whole rent resp. himself paid for the whole house, namely, 8s. 6d. plus half the permitted increase. Applt. contended that the 8s. 6d. a week was the standard rent of the part he occupied, & that as no notice was served upon him of the permitted increase he was not liable to pay any more. Resp. sued for possession on the ground of non-payment of rent & rates in respect of the sub-tenancy. The county ct. judge gave judgment for resp. as pltf. Deft. appealed:—Held: resp. could not charge a rent in excess of the standard rent unless he could bring himself within the last sentence of sub-sect. (2) of sect. 3 "where a notice of increase of rent which at the time was valid has been served on any tenant, the increase may be continued without service of any fresh notice on any subsequent tenant," but the reference there to the tenant was to the tenant of the dwelling-house in respect of which the question arose & the landlord of part was not entitled to increase the rent of the part unless notice of increase was given to the tenant of the part.—*HARRIS v. was made up. As the item of occupier's rates was subsequently found to have been overestimated, the original notice was amended by a corrective notice, sent by the landlord's factors & received by the tenant before any increased rent had become due:—Held: amendment of a defective notice was not restricted to the method prescribed by 1923 Act, s. 6, the primary purpose of which was to validate defective notices which had been acted on, & it was competent to amend the notice by the method adopted.—*M'KELLAR v. 7218 1. Recovery by action—Whether in time.—The tenant of a dwelling-house, to which the Increase of Rent & Mtge. Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923, applied, brought an action against her landlord (a) for the recovery of sums paid by her as rent in excess of the amount permitted by the Act—which sums are, by sect. 12 of the Act, made recoverable from the landlord by the tenant, & (b) for the recovery of a sum paid by her as a premium, on the granting of the tenancy—which sum is, by sect. 13 of the Act, recoverable by the person by whom it is made:—Held: the action, so far as it related to the claim for the repayment of the amount of the premium, did not come within the scope of that portion of sect. 20 of Common Law Procedure Amendment Act (Ireland), 1853, which applied to actions brought to recover “penalties, damages, or sums of money given to the party grieved, by any statute,” since the words “damages or sums of money” must be construed as meaning damages or sums of money of a penal nature, which the premium paid was not. Accordingly the two years’ limit of time within which such an action must be brought, imposed by that sect., did not apply: further, the action, as regards both claims, was one brought upon the statute, the period of limitation for which was twenty years.—LOWE v. GILCHRIST, [1936] I. R. 435.—IR.

Deft. had sublet two rooms at a weekly rent of 7s., the sublet part being also a controlled dwelling-house within the meaning of the Act. The judge apportioned the rent attributable to the sublet portion as  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the whole rent. The rent of the sublet portion therefore exceeded the recoverable rent in respect of that portion by 1s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per week. The judge thereupon made an order for the recovery of possession of the sublet portion of the house. It was contended for deft. that the judge ought to have considered the question of whether or not the order made would necessarily result in overcrowding, as pltf. had a wife & four sons, & the order for recovery of possession applied to the sublet portion only, & was sought for the purpose of pltf. & his family going into possession thereof:—Held: once the fact of overcharging had been established, the judge was entitled to make an order for possession under sect. 4 (1), provided that he was of the opinion that it was reasonable so to do. The judge having stated that he had considered all the circumstances of the case, presumably including the question of the possibility of overcrowding, the Ct. of Appeal would not disturb his finding.—BOULTON v. The term of years for which the lease was granted expired in 1924, but the lease continued to remain in possession:—Held: the lessee was not entitled to the protection of Increase of Rent & Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923, as he had broken one of the conditions of his tenancy by allowing himself to be adjudicated bkpt., & therefore, he was no longer entitled to possession, even as a statutory tenant.—Re DREW, [1929] 1 R. 504.—IR.

dwelling-house under a contract of tenancy from month to month at the monthly rent of £1 15s. 8d. In 1920 F. C. went to reside elsewhere & never subsequently returned to the house. In 1920 F. C.'s brother, J. C., went, with F. C.'s permission, to reside in the house. A notice of increase of rent was served in 1920, subsequent to J. C. going into occupation. F. C. & J. C. were partners in business, & the rent of the dwelling-house was paid from the office of their firm, & was debited in the firm's accounts to J. C.'s salary or to his share of the profits. J. C. was rated in respect of the occupation of the dwelling-house. Both F. C. & J. C. stated in evidence that there was no assignment of the tenancy from F. C. to J. C. The landlord brought an action in the Circuit Court against both F. C. & J. C. to recover possession:—Held: the proper inference from the evidence was that J. C. occupied the dwelling-house as tenant at will to his brother F. C.; accordingly the proviso to sect. 4 (1) of the 1923 Act, applied; it therefore followed that the landlord was not precluded from obtaining an order for possession against F. C.; it further followed that, as the dwelling-house had been lawfully sublet to J. C. before proceedings were commenced, J. C. was entitled to retain possession under sect. 4 (2) of the 1923 Act, notwithstanding the judgment for recovery of possession against F. C.—SISK v. CROMIN, [1930] 1 R. 98.—IR.

7318b. — — — — —.]—On an application for possession of a cottage made before justices under Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), it was proved that M. worked for C. at certain gas works from Apr. 1920, till Jan. 1921. Adjoining the gas works was a cottage, the property of C., which was let to M. at the commencement & in consequence of his employment. In Jan. 1921, on the termination of his employment, M. "received notice to quit the cottage, & was asked to pay a certain sum for rent. He applied to the county ct. & the rent was settled by the county ct. judge at 5s. per week." M. paid this rent up to Sept. 8, 1928. On June 1, 1928, C. having sold the gas works, including the cottage, to a limited liability co., conveyed the same to the co. On Sept. 22, 1928, the co. served a notice to quit on M., who subsequently tendered the rent due from Sept. 8 to 22, which was refused. On Oct. 13, 1928, the statutory notice under the Act of 1838 was served by the co. on M. The cottage was reasonably required by the co. as a residence for a man engaged in their whole-time employment at the gas works. The existence of alternative accommodation was not proved by the landlord. The justices found that no new tenancy had been created & that there was no obligation on the co. to prove alternative accommodation. Accordingly they ordered that a warrant of ejectment should issue:—Held: at the time ejectment was sought the cottage was not let to applt. in consequence of his employment, the tenancy then being held under an entirely new contract, & that there were no materials on which the justices could find that no new tenancy had been created. Accordingly, as resp. had not proved the existence of alternative accommodation, the order that a warrant of ejectment should issue must be quashed.—MURTON v. ALDIS (1929), 141 L. T. 168; 93 J. (2) The Div. Ct. thought that as no one had expressly mentioned the Rent (Restrictions) Act in the county ct. they ought not to consider its effect. I do not agree with that decision. In my opinion the Act imposes upon the county ct. judge the duty of deciding whether the property comes within its provisions &, if it does, whether he should make or refuse an order for possession (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—*SALTER v. On Lady Day, 1929, he again sub-let the same three rooms to a sub-tenant, & later determined the contractual tenancy so created by a notice to quit. In an action brought by him to recover possession of the three rooms deft. claimed that his tenancy had become a statutory one, & relied on sect. 2 (1) of 1923 Act. Pltf. contended that when he came into possession of the whole house in 1929, the whole house thereby became decontrolled. He also contended that because of the wording of the first proviso to sect. 2 (1) & of the fact that the Act has been held to operate in rem, the part sub-let to deft. was not part of a dwelling-house to which the principal Act applied:—Held: the first proviso to sect. 2 (1) of 1923 Act applied; the dwelling-house let to deft. was not decontrolled; & that pltf. was not entitled to an order for possession.

7352e. — — — — —.]—(1) The expression "landlord" in 1923 Act, s. 2 (1), is not to be construed in the strict sense as requiring a tenant & a contract of tenancy, but it must be used either in the looser sense of "owner," or in the still looser sense of a person who at a later stage is going to appear as a landlord contesting with a tenant the terms of his tenancy. Neither in 1920 Act, nor in 1923 Act, is the word "landlord" used in its technical sense of a person between whom & the tenant a contractual relationship of landlord & tenant exists.

Where a person who is a "landlord" within 1923 Act, s. 2 (1), can prove either that he was in possession of the whole of the dwelling-house at the date of the passing of 1923 Act, or at any time since that date, 1920 Act ceases to apply to that dwelling-house & to every part of it. The whole house & every part of it is decontrolled, & a subsequent letting of the dwelling-house, or of any part of it, cannot revive control.

(3) Where a lessee at a rent less than two-thirds of the ratable value is in actual possession of the dwelling-house after July 31, 1923, the dwelling-house is thereby decontrolled, because, under 1920 Act, s. 12, the lessee must be treated as the landlord, & a subsequent sub-letting of certain rooms forming part of that dwelling-house does not revive control.—*LLOYD v. 7356c. — Possession by trespasser.]—On the death of the tenant of controlled premises after the passing of the 1923 Act, a trespasser went into occupation of the premises until they were let to him by the landlord:—Held: the landlord had never come into "actual possession" of the premises under sect. 2 (1), (3) of the Act so as to render them decontrolled premises. During the occupation of the premises by the trespasser the landlord was entitled to possession but was not in "actual possession" of the premises.—HOLDEN v. HOWARD, [1938] 1 K. politan police district of a rateable value of £13 per annum, the standard rent being 8s. 6d. a week. On Oct. 10, 1932, she came into possession of the whole of the dwelling-house, which thereupon became decontrolled by virtue of Rent & Mtge. Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 2. She let the dwelling-house to deft. from Nov. 5, 1932, on a weekly tenancy at an agreed rent of 25s. a week. On July 18, 1933, the Rent & Mtge. Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), was passed. Pltf. failed to register the dwelling-house under sect. 2 of that Act within three months, but subsequently obtained from the county ct. a certificate that there was reasonable excuse for the failure to register. Application for registration in pursuance of the certificate was made in Jan. 1934:—Held: where an application for registration was made in pursuance of a certificate of the county ct., the effect was to place the house, as from that date, in the same position as though it had been registered within three months, & the landlord suffered no further detriment through the delay than such as might result from the application of the Act of 1933 between July 18, 1933, & the application to register.—STOKES v. Subsequently pltf. let to deft. part of the dwelling-house, consisting of six rooms, & forming a separate dwelling-house, for a period of four years terminating after June 24, 1926:—Held: that within 1923 Act, s. 2 (2), pltf. was the landlord of the part of the dwelling-house let to the tenant, & deft. was the tenant, although at the time the long lease was granted he was only the tenant of the whole house, & the part consisting of the six rooms was not in existence as a separate dwelling, & consequently, the said part of the dwelling-house was decontrolled.—KINGSLEY v. ADLER, [1929] 1 K. B. 525; 98 L. J. K. B. 218; 140 L. T. 438; 93 J. P. 107; 45 T. L. R. 226; 73 Sol. Jo. 93; 27 L. G. R. 220, D. C.

7359c. — — — Contractual tenant.—By an agreement for a lease dated Jan. 31, 1919, the shop & premises, No. 9, C. S., B., were let to W. for a term of two years from Mar. 25, 1919, at a rent of £45 per annum, the tenancy to continue thereafter, but to be terminable by six months' notice in writing. On Sept. 16, 1921, the landlord gave W. six months' notice to determine the tenancy, which expired on Mar. 25, 1922, but W. continued to occupy the premises at a rent of £54 per annum after the notice expired. On May 7, 1926, W. died, having by his will appointed his wife his sole executrix & universal legatee. Mrs. W. did not go into physical possession of the premises before May 26, 1926, when she entered into an agreement to take the premises on a three years' tenancy at the same rent. On July 26, 1926, she assigned the benefit of the agreement to deft. On Dec. 5, 1927, pltf's. acquired the freehold of the premises, & on Jan. 5, 1928, gave notice to deft. terminating the tenancy at the expiration of the term. Deft., however, claimed to hold over under Rent & Mortgage Interest Restriction Acts, 1920 & 1923, & pltf's. brought these proceedings for possession, claiming that although the premises had been a dwelling-house within the Acts they had been decontrolled as a result of the agreement of May 26, 1926. On appeal from an order made by the county court judge for possession:—Held: (1) there was evidence before the county court judge to support his finding that W. became a contractual tenant at the increased rent after the termination of the tenancy agreement of Jan. 31, 1919; (2) Mrs. W. was consequently a contractual tenant at the date of the agreement of May 26, 1926; (3) the agreement of May 26, 1926, therefore operated to decontrol the premises. There is no reason for giving "the tenant" in 1923 Act, s. 2 (2), the limited meaning of statutory tenant.—ABBEY v. BARNSTYN, [1930] 1 K. B. 660; 99 L. J. K. B. 369; 142 L. T. 619; 94 J. 7359d. Meaning of "valid lease"—Lease at rent exceeding standard rent.—A dwelling-house within the scope of the Rent Restriction Acts was let by the landlord to the tenant for a term of more than two years at a rent which exceeded the standard rent together with the increases permitted by the Acts. The lease conferred on the tenant an option to determine at the end of the first year:—Held: (1) the lease was a "valid lease" within sect. 2 (2) of 1923 Act notwithstanding that the rent received exceeded the rent chargeable thereunder; (2) the tenant's option to determine at the end of the first year did not prevent the term being a "term of not less than two years" within the sub-sect., & consequently that the Acts had ceased to apply to the dwelling-house as from the commencement of the term.—*QUINLAN v. 109b. Accusation of being informer.]—Pltf. was a member of a club in which there had been some gambling machines. As a result of a complaint being made to the police, the machines were removed. A lampoon, which pltf. alleged referred to him & suggested that it was he who had informed the police, was put up on a wall in the club. The concluding words of the lampoon were: "But he who gave the game away, may he byrnn in hell & rue the day." Defts., husband & wife, were the proprietors, & the female deft. the secretary of the club. In an action for libel pltf. alleged that the words were defamatory & that defts. had published them by allowing the lampoon to remain on the wall:—Held: (1) it is not defamatory to say of a man he has informed the police of a crime; (per SLESSER & GREENE, L.J.J.) the words in the present case were not defamatory; (per GREER, L.J.) the words were defamatory, because they meant something more than the mere fact that the police had been informed of a crime. They meant that the pltf. had been guilty of disloyalty to fellow-members of his club; (2) (SLESSER, L.J.; dissenting in the case of the male deft.): there was evidence of publication against both defts.—*BYRNE v. 109c. Letters between insurance company & solicitors—Relating to admission of negligence of insured.]—Pltf. took out with an insurance co. a motor insurance policy containing a clause that pltf. would not incur any expense whether in respect of litigation or otherwise or make any payment, settlement, arrangement or admission of liability for which the co. might be liable under the policy without the written authority of the co., & that the co. should have absolute conduct & control of all or any proceedings against pltf. Pltf.'s car was run into by a motor lorry, the collision being caused solely by the negligence of the lorry driver. A passenger in pltf.'s car was seriously injured, & issued a writ against the owners of the lorry & also, at their request, against pltf. The latter informed the insurance co., & left the matter in its hands, as he was bound to do under the policy. The co. sent the papers to its solrs., who entered an appearance to the writ & acted in the conduct of the defence. Neither the co. nor the solrs. ever at any time communicated with pltf. in any way, & eventually the solrs. delivered a defence on behalf of pltf. admitting that the accident was caused solely by his negligence & wrote a letter to this effect to the solrs. opposing them. Having accidentally found out what was happening, pltf. protested to the local agent of the insurance co., to which agent the latter wrote: "If we had repudiated liability we ran a very serious risk of the ct. holding a different view." At the trial of the action, judgment was entered against pltf. for £1,124 12s. 10d., damages & costs, which sums were at once discharged by the insurance co. Pltf. now claimed damages against the solrs. & the insurance co. for breach of duty, negligence & libel:—Held: (1) the terms of the policy clearly entitled the insurers to nominate a solr. to act in the conduct of the proceedings; (2) such solr. was bound to act bond fide in what he considered to be the common interest of the insurers & the insured, & upon the facts, he had not done so; (3) the damages for breach of duty were only nominal, since the sums recovered in the action were at once paid by the insurance co. Pltf. could only sue the solrs. in contract & had no cause of action against them in tort; (4) assuming that the occasion upon which the letter admitting negligence was written was a privileged one, there was evidence of malice.—GROOM v. CROCKER, [1938] 2 All E. R. 394; 158 L. T. 477; 54 T. L. R. 861; 82 Sol. Jo. 374, C. A.

109d. Allegation that firm refused to accept award of conciliation board.]—Pltf. co., a firm of haulage contractors, & its managing director, brought actions for libel against six newspapers. In five of the cases the words complained of alleged that pltf. co. had refused to accept an interim wages award of a joint conciliation board for the road transport industry, & that, in consequence of that, members of a trades union had refused to handle the firm's goods at Hull & Liverpool Docks. In the sixth action, the words complained of were similar, but it was also stated that the managing director was chairman of the Yorkshire Area Joint Conciliation Board, & had taken an active part in the formulation of the Yorkshire employers' scheme. In the innuendo, it was pleaded in each action that the words meant, inter alia, that pltf. co. had refused to honour the award, but had been compelled so to do by the refusal of the 129a. Accusation of being Jew hater—Member of business largely carried on by Jews.]—Pltf. was employed by D., a member of the Diamond Corp'n., under an agreement for a year beginning on Jan. 1, 1928. The agreement provided that: "It is the intention of both parties to renew this agreement on expiry for a further period if mutually satisfactory terms can then be arranged." Pltf. continued in D.'s employment until he was given notice of dismissal, on Nov. 19, 1935, to take effect on Dec. 31, 1935. Pltf. alleged that deft. had made to D. certain statements defamatory of pltf., & he also alleged that deft. wrongfully & maliciously induced D. to commit a breach of contract by dismissing pltf. from his employment without proper notice. In an action for damages, the jury found (inter alia) that the expression "[ptf.] is a Jew-hater" was defamatory, & that the words referred to pltf. in relation to his business, but that no special damage had been proved. The jury also found that D. had committed a breach of his contract with pltf., & that deft. had wrongfully & maliciously induced such breach. Deft. & D. were both of the Jewish faith, & the diamond business is largely carried on by persons of that faith:—Held: (1) to call a person a Jew-hater is defamatory; (2) the words complained of were spoken of pltf. in relation to his business, & so were actionable without proof of special damage; (3) the contract was not a yearly hiring, & pltf. was entitled to reasonable notice. There had therefore been a breach of this contract; (4) (SLESSER, 167a. Amateur sportsman—Imputation of professionalism.]—Defts., a firm of chocolate manufacturers, issued, as an advertisement of their goods, a caricature of pltf., a prominent amateur golfer, depicting him as playing golf, with a packet of their chocolate protruding from his pocket, & a caddy was represented with him, who also had a packet of chocolate, the excellence of which he likened to the excellence of pltf.'s drive. The advertisement was published without the knowledge or consent of pltf., who thereupon brought an action claiming damages, alleging that it constituted a libel. By his statement of claim he alleged that "defts. thereby meant, & were understood to mean, that pltf. had agreed or permitted his portrait to be exhibited for the purpose of the advertisement of defts.' chocolate; that he had done so for gain & reward; that he had prostituted his reputation as an amateur golf player for advertising purposes; that he was seeking notoriety & gain by the means aforesaid; & that he had been guilty of conduct unworthy of his status as an amateur golfer." At the trial evidence was given by golfers to the effect that if an amateur golfer lent himself to a scheme for advertising, people might think he was not maintaining his amateur status, & that he might be called upon to resign his membership of any reputable club. It appeared from correspondence passing between defts. & their advertising agents that the question of the possible effect on the amateur status of pltf. & others similarly caricatured had been brought to the attention of the defts.:—Held: in the circumstances in which the publication took place, as explained by the evidence, the caricature was capable of bearing the meaning alleged in the innuendo, & there ought to be a new trial limited to the assessment of damages.—*TOLLEY v. Pltf., who was a horse trainer, received from the stewards of the Jockey Club a trainer's licence to train horses to run under the Rules of Racing during the year 1930. The licence was expressed to be subject to conditions, condition 3 of which provided that a trainer's licence might be withdrawn or suspended by the stewards of the Jockey Club in their absolute discretion, & such withdrawal or suspension might be published in the Racing Calendar, the recognised organ of the Jockey Club, for any reason which might seem proper to them, & that the stewards should not be bound to state their reasons. Pltf. trained a horse which ran in a race at a meeting held under the Rules of the Jockey Club. After the race the acting stewards of the meeting ordered an examination of the horse, & on receiving a report of that examination they referred the matter to the stewards of the Jockey Club. The stewards held an inquiry, & their decision was communicated by the Club's agents to the Press agencies & the Times, & was published by them. It was also published in the Racing Calendar. The decision contained the following statement: "The stewards of the Jockey Club . . . after further investigation, satisfied themselves that a drug had been administered to the horse for the purpose of the race in question. They disqualified the horse for this race & for all future races under their rules & warned C. C. Chapman the trainer of the horse off Newmarket Heath." In an action by the trainer against the stewards, their agents & the Times Publishing Co., the proprietors of the Times, for libel, HORRIDGE, J., after holding that there was no evidence of malice, left questions to the jury which they answered to the effect that this statement was not true in the natural meaning of the words but meant that pltf. was a party to the actual doping of the horse, & they fixed the damages at £10,000, £3,000 & £3,000, in respect of the publication in the Racing Calendar, to the news agencies & in the Times respectively. Judgment was accordingly entered for £13,000 against the stewards & their agents for publication in the Racing Calendar & to the news agencies, & £3,000 against the stewards, their agents, & the Times Publishing Co. for publication in the Times. On appeal:—Held: (1) in finding that the words published were not true in their natural meaning, the jury must have meant that the statement, which was literally true, involved an untrue innuendo which was defamatory; (2) the publication of the decision of a domestic tribunal in the terms in which the tribunal bond fide embodied it, in the publication chosen by the parties as the means of communication between the tribunal & the section of the public interested, was privileged; (3) the publication in the Racing Calendar of the stewards' decision was therefore privileged, & as pltf. had agreed to publication in that periodical of the stewards' decision, it was immaterial that the jury put a meaning on the words in which it was bond fide embodied by the stewards different from that which was intended by them; (4) HORRIDGE, J. was right in holding that there was no evidence of malice, & the action in regard to the privileged publication in the Racing Calendar therefore failed; (5) the publication to the news agencies & in the Times was not privileged, but the damages awarded both in respect of these publications as well as in respect of the publication in the Racing Calendar were excessive; (6) there must in regard to the claims in respect of the publication to the news agencies & in the Times be a new trial, which ought not in all the circumstances to be limited to the question of damages, but to go also to the question whether there had been a libel.

(7) Per SLESSER, L.J. As publication of the stewards' decision in the Racing Calendar was assented to by pltf. & the publication was in fact a true statement of their decision, the principle of volenti non fit injuria applied, & no claim for damages in respect of that publication would lie. The fact that the decision was published in such a way as to give rise to a defamatory innuendo was a risk which pltf. by consenting to a report of the decision being published in the Racing Calendar, had elected to run.

(8) Per ROMER, L.J. The privilege given by the common law to reports of proceedings before a ct. of justice open to the public does not extend to a proceeding before a domestic tribunal, such as the stewards of the Jockey Club, at which the public are not entitled to be present.—*CHAPMAN v. 171a. Charge of having borrowed money from servant.]—Pltf.'s housemaid re-entered the service of deft. on Apr. 12, 1934. On that date deft. addressed & sent a telegram to pltf. containing the following words: "Edith has resumed her service with us to-day. Please send her possessions & the money you borrowed, also her wages to Old Barton.—Sim." Pltf. claimed damages for libel, alleging that these words were defamatory, & further that by them deft. meant & was understood to mean that pltf. was in pecuniary difficulties, that by reason thereof he had been compelled to borrow & had in fact borrowed money from his housemaid, that he had failed to pay her her wages, & that he was a person to whom no one ought to give any credit. Deft. denied that the words were reasonably capable of a defamatory meaning or of any of the meanings ascribed to them in the innuendo:—Held: the words complained of were not reasonably capable of a defamatory meaning, & judgment should therefore be entered for deft.—*SIM v. 347 i. Profession or calling must be carried on at time of publication.]—It is not defamatory to say of a man that he should not be allowed to follow his calling because of injuries, which would make the pursuit of that calling dangerous to him, when there is no disparagement of him which lowers his reputation in the judgment of his fellow men, although such a statement, if false, might give rise to an action for injurious falsehood. The rule that a statement is not actionable per se as reflecting on another in the way of his calling unless he exercises or holds it at the time of the publication applies to actions for libel as well as to actions for slander. The rule, however, does not prevent a statement reflecting on a man in the discharge of a former office from being actionable per se where it is also defamatory of him as a man.—HENDERSON v. THOMPSON, [1934] N. Z. L. R. 444.—N.Z.

A meeting of the union was called to consider pltf.'s conduct, & thereat deft. called pltf. & others "dirty stinking soaks & parasites," & stated that they were the first three men, in the event of industrial trouble, the union would have to fight. After discussion, the meeting resolved that pltf. apologise to deft., or in default, should resign. Pltf. did not do either, & at a subsequent meeting, was expelled from the union for not abiding by a decision of the meeting. Deft. thereafter successfully objected to pltf. being employed as a stevedore.—Held: the words were not applicable to pltf.'s conduct in his calling, & were not actionable per se.—*TAYLOR v. Deft. later stated to third parties that he had contributed to the assocn. by the payment of $5 by cheque.—Held: the statement made by deft. might be most injurious to pltf., & if true would justify his removal from office, & the repetition of the words was the natural consequence of deft. ttering them.—COOPER v.

866a. Photograph of husband of plaintiff with another woman—Alleged to be engaged.]—(1) Defts. published in a newspaper a photograph of one C. & a Miss X. together with the words "Mr. C., the race-horse owner, & Miss X., whose engagement has been announced." Pltf. was, & was known among her acquaintances as, the lawful wife of C.; but defts. did not know this:—Held: the publication was capable of conveying a meaning defamatory of pltf. & the jury having found that it conveyed to reasonably minded people an aspersion on her moral character, that she was entitled to damages.

It is impossible for the person publishing a statement which, to those who know certain facts, is capable of a defamatory meaning in regard to A., to defend himself by saying: "I never heard of A. & did not mean to injure him." After the separation pltf. set up in business as a garage proprietor, & she subsequently converted this business into a private limited co. in which she held the majority of the shares & also was the chairman & managing director. In 1929 she saw in a churchyard near her husband's residence a tombstone on which was the following inscription: "In loving memory of Jennie the dearly beloved wife of W. R. Crawshaw Ralston of the Bungalow, Valley. Died 20th May, 1916." Deft. was the W. R. Crawshaw Ralston mentioned in the inscription & he had caused the inscription to be made. Pltf. brought an action against her husband for libel & also for a declaration that she was the lawful wife of deft.:—Held: though the inscription was capable of a defamatory meaning, the pltf., by reason of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12, could not sue her husband on it, the action being for a tort & not for the protection & security of her separate property.—*RALSTON v. But they said: "If & in so far as the words complained of meant or were understood to mean or were capable of meaning that pltf. took no steps to bring to justice persons guilty of the death of L. or of the attack on the British troops at Queenstown, or that pltf. was unfit to hold any office of trust or responsibility, or of any kind, or that pltf. was a person with whom no honest or responsible man ought to have anything to do, such words were & are true in substance & in fact." The probabilities were in favour of its being read as meaning: "More grave disclosures about the Sun Life of Canada" rather than: "More grave disclosures by the Sun Life of Canada." The poster was displayed under contract by defts., who were newsgagents at ry. station bookstalls. Defts. gave evidence that at their head office newspaper poster contents bills arrived in such quantities & had to be dispatched with such speed, that they had no time to open & consider them. The manager of a bookstall was granted no discretion as to whether he should withdraw a publication on the ground that it was libellous. There were district superintendents of bookstalls, but each had a large number of bookstalls to cover. A jury found (inter alia) that there was negligence on the part of defts. in not knowing that the poster or the newspaper to which it referred contained a libel:—Held: there was evidence upon which the jury could so find.—SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. Against these defts. he pleaded that they had "assisted to publish" the libels in the book. The judge in chambers ordered this part of the statement of claim to be struck out & pltf. appealed:—Held: (1) an allegation of assisting in publication is identical with an allegation of publication; (2) the question of whether these defts. were a party to the publication was one of fact to be decided on the evidence at the hearing & the claim in respect thereof should not have been struck out.—*MARCHANT v. Defts. denied the innuendo & pleaded that the words were published on a privileged occasion & without malice. Defts. by their particulars stated that a member of their assocn. made an inquiry with regard to pltf., & the secretary, in pursuance of his duty to further the objects of the assocn., instructed their inquiry officer to inquire for pltf., & that the inquiry officer was informed that pltf. had left, & thereupon defts. in the honest belief that this was true published the information for the benefit of the members. 1446a. —.]—To constitute a communication made on a privileged occasion there must be a legal, moral, or social duty to make the communication, as well as an interest in the recipient to receive it, & the question, which is for the judge & not the jury, whether such a duty exists depends on the circumstances, the nature of the information, & the relation of the recipient & the informant.

One B., the foreign manager of a co. which carried on business abroad, but was in voluntary liquidation, wrote to deft., who was a director & was also the liquidator of the co. in England, a letter containing gross charges of immorality, drunkenness, & dishonesty on the part of pltf., who was the managing director of the co. abroad. Deft. wrote in answer that he had long suspected the pltf. of immorality, & asked B. whether he could obtain a sworn statement of the matters disclosed in his letter from the persons mentioned therein as his informants, adding that it might "even be necessary to bribe" them, & that he understood that one of them was "a woman of the lowest type on earth—a prostitute all her life"; that pltf.'s wife was an old friend of his, & that he would be unfair to an old friend if he did not place the facts before her, but that without a sworn statement he would not speak. Without obtaining any corroboration of the allegations in B.'s letter, & without communicating with pltf., deft. showed B.'s letter first to S., the chairman of the board of directors & the largest shareholder in the co., & then to pltf.'s wife. The allegations in B.'s letter were unfounded, but deft. believed them to be true:—Held: (1) the publications to S. & B. were made upon privileged occasions, but the publication to the pltf.'s wife was not upon a privileged occasion; (2) in the circumstances relating to the publications to S. & to B. & to pltf.'s wife there was evidence of malice which ought to be left to a jury.—*WATT v. It seems to me that also in the case where a man submits to a domestic tribunal, any person is entitled to record the fact that that domestic tribunal decided against him. If it is a question relating to a school, & a boy is properly expelled by the competent authority, I think that any one can say, without being sued for slander or libel, that the boy was, in fact, expelled. The same thing would apply to expulsion from a club. When a man subjects himself to a domestic tribunal he must be in exactly the same position as regards complaining of a record of that domestic tribunal as every citizen who has to submit himself to the lawful tribunals of the country (GREER, L.J.).—COOKSON v. Deft. pleaded qualified privilege & alternatively justification:—Held: (1) the defamatory statements contained in the letter had not been proved by a preponderance of evidence to be true, but in the circumstances the occasion & writing of the letter were privileged, & pltf. had not satisfied the onus on him of proving that deft. was not using the occasion honestly but was actuated by some indirect or ulterior motive such as malice; (2) as to the distribution of the letter at the meeting, the publication was privileged as dealing with subject-matters in which deft. & the other members of the society present had a legitimate common interest, & also on the ground that the letter was relevant to an attack made upon deft. by pltf. at the said meeting.—*MAASS v. Pltf., in his reply, disputed his signature, & said that he was not bound by the alleged undertaking. Pltf. then applied for an order that the issue as to the alleged undertaking & its construction should be tried separately before the other issues:—Held: when pltf. asked for an order that one issue should be disposed of before the trial of the other issues, the order should be made only when there were special circumstances justifying it, & as there were none in the present case, the order must be refused.—*BOTTOMLEY v. The learned judge, on the evidence, held that in certain respects the facts stated in the article were not truly stated, & further, that the imputation of malice in fact was not well founded:—Held: the "rolled-up plea" in an action for libel, viz. that in so far as the words complained of consist of allegations of fact, they are in their natural & ordinary meaning true in substance & in fact; & in so far as the words consist of expressions of opinion, they are fair comment made in good faith & without malice for the benefit of the public upon the said facts which are a matter of public interest, is not a plea partly of justification & partly of fair comment, but is a plea of fair comment only. Since the judgment of the House of Lords in Sutherland v. Slopes, [1925] A. C. 647, No. 1739, the decision of the Ct. of Appeal in Norton v. Bertling (1910), 29 N. Z. L. As a result of this inquiry, the stewards purported to disqualify a certain horse, its owner & rider for three months, but inasmuch as the owner was not summoned to answer the charge made against him at the inquiry, the disqualification was void. On the morning following the inquiry, the libel complained of was published in "The Mercury," the material portion of which read: "The stewards decided the charge was sustained, & disqualified the horse, owner, & rider for three months." It was proved that defts. issued no instructions to J. not to report information he received at such inquiries, but all other press representatives were excluded:—Held: there was sufficient evidence to justify

These officers were not named in the book, & were not present in Persia at the time referred to in the article. In the same article were contained statements of a Major-General commanding a force in Persia to the effect that the charges were unfounded, & Bolshevik propaganda:—Held: the allegations were defamatory, & the contrary statements contained in the article did not prevent the article being libellous.—*SAVAGE v. 2041a. ———. ———.]—In an action for libel pltf. set out in his statement of claim the alleged libel, & in a separate paragraph alleged an innuendo which practically repeated, but somewhat extended, the statements in the alleged libel. Defts. did not plead justification or fair comment, but paid 20s. into ct. in respect of the alleged libel as sufficient damages; they made no payment into ct. in respect of the innuendo; & they gave notice under R. S. C. Ord. 36, r. 37, of their intention to give in evidence certain matters in mitigation of damages. At the trial pltf. gave evidence that save for one lapse he was a man of unblemished reputation. Thereupon he was cross-examined as to specific incidents not mentioned in the libel or in the particulars served under R. S. C. Ord. 36, r. 37, it being suggested that he was a man of bad reputation. This line of cross-examination was objected to, but was allowed. Before the conclusion of the cross-examination the jury intervened with an intimation that they desired to find for the defts., which they then did without any summing up. On appeal:—Held: (1) the cross-examination was admissible as cross-examination to credit, but that if the incidents were denied by pltf. no further evidence could be called to rebut pltf.'s denials, & that the jury should have been told that while they were not bound to accept pltf.'s denials, those denials, though unaccepted, afforded no evidence that the Deft. did not adduce evidence but relied on the alleged insufficiency of pltf.'s evidence. On appeal:—Held: the ct. was in as good a position as the judge to form an opinion on the evidence & to draw inferences therefrom; & in view of the finding of privilege the onus was on pltf. to establish express malice & he had not discharged that onus.—*ANDERSON v. Where an action for defamation is tried by a judge with a jury, & pltf. recovers nominal damages only, the judge, in deciding whether there is "good cause" for depriving pltf. of costs, should take into consideration all the circumstances of the case, both before & after the issue of the writ. 2298b. Identity of plaintiff.—Defts. published an article in a newspaper published by them in which they referred to certain aeroplane smuggling exploits of "an Englishwoman." Pltf. brought a libel action against defts., & in her statement of claim she alleged that the words "an Englishwoman," "she," & "her," in the article, referring to the woman who was alleged to have been guilty of plane smuggling, meant pltf., but pltf. was not identified in the article by name or description as the woman referred to. Defts. applied for an order for particulars of the allegation that the words complained of referred to pltf. The master made an order that pltf. should deliver to defts. particulars of the allegation in the statement of claim, that the words complained of were published of pltf., & that "Englishwoman," "she," & "her," in the words meant pltf., stating the facts from which it was to be inferred that the words were published of pltf. & that the said specific words meant the pltf. The Judge in Chambers reversed the order of the master. On appeal:—Held: the material facts on which a pltf. must rely in a libel action necessarily included the facts & matters from which it was to be inferred that the words were published of pltf. Without a statement of those facts & matters it was impossible for defts. to be in a position to decide how to plead to the statement of claim. The matters & facts referred to in the order of the master were material facts on which pltf. relied as a matter of necessity in support of her allegation that she was defamed by the article in question, & under the provisions of R. S. C., Ord. 19, r. 4, such facts ought to have been stated in the statement of claim, & if not so stated defts. were entitled to have further particulars of the allegation that the words referred to pltf.—*BRUCE v. Justification had been pleaded by two of defts. The daughter & her father brought separate actions in respect of these libels & an order was made consolidating the actions:—Held: the actions ought not to be consolidated on account of the embarrassment to the judge & jury in trying such actions together & the hardship to one party to wait through the trial while matters quite irrelevant to that party's case were being tried, with the consequent responsibility for costs.—*MARCHANT v. ## Part XI.—Criminal Proceedings.

2301a. —.—W. had been concerned in litigation with an insurance co. In a letter to C., whom the co. had charged with an offence W. published a defamatory libel concerning G., the solr. acting for the co. For this he was charged & convicted:—Held: the libel was not one which the jury would have been justified in regarding as trivial; the prosecution are not bound to prove that the libel would have been unusually likely to provoke a breach of the peace; the slender link of common interest between W. & C. could not authorise the publication of false & defamatory statements

PART XI. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.—A. sm. General rule.—It is not the law that the publication of a libel cannot

about a third person whose character was irrelevant to any question which was the legitimate concern of C., & the occasion was not privileged; the jury were entitled in the absence of evidence to the contrary to draw the inference that as W. had an intimate knowledge of G. he knew the libel to be false; in the absence of a plea of justification, the statements must be assumed to be false.—*R. v. 2489a. Questions by judge as to truth—No plea of justification.]—On the trial of a prisoner for publishing defamatory libels there was no plea of justification, but after the close of the case for the defence the judge called a number of witnesses, including the two persons alleged to have been libelled, & put to them a number of questions which, as the ct. held, might have suggested to the jury that the issue was whether the words complained of were true:—Held: the calling of these witnesses was irregular, & the conviction must be quashed.—*R. v. 2303 1. Proceedings maintainable.]—The accused (applt.) was tried on a charge in two counts, (1) the publishing of a defamatory libel knowing it to be false; (2) the publishing of a defamatory libel. The writing complained of was a printed leaflet headed, "Bankers' Toadies," followed by the words, inter alia, "God made Bankers' Toadies, just as he made snakes, slugs, snails & other creepy-crawly treacherous & poisonous things. Never, therefore, abuse them, just exterminate them." On the reverse side, under the heading, "Bankers' Toadies," were the names of nine citizens of Edmonton & the institutions with which they are associated; & underneath their names were the words, in larger type, "Exterminate Them." The jury returned a verdict of guilty on the first count & the accused was sentenced to three months' imprisonment:—Held: the leaflet was beyond question defamatory of the persons named.—*R. v. B. kept the cabs & two others at the garage of the defts., who cleaned them, supplied them with tyres, grease, oil & petrol, & did all necessary repairs to & charged rent for them. At first B. paid defts.' weekly bills

Resp. offered to pay these charges, & appl't. then claimed a lien for further charges to which it was not entitled, & so conducted itself as to show that a tender of the amount to which it was entitled would not have been accepted:—Held: on the evidence, no tender of the correct amount was necessary.—*GAMBLINGS, LTD. v. #### PART III. SECT. 4.

sq. Lien of carrier—Goods subject to bill of sale.]—Furniture on certain premises became subject to a bill of sale which contained a covenant against its removal from the premises without the consent of the bill of sale holder. Without such consent the grantor of the bill of sale, who remained in possession of the furniture, employed a co. carrying on the business of carriers & storemen to remove the furniture & store it in its warehouse. The removal contract provided that the removal charge was payable on demand, contained an endorsement about a sum payable weekly, & gave the removers a lien for its charges. A second contract was then entered into for removing & storing the furniture, which specified the charge for storage & contained a similar term as in the former contract, giving a lien for all moneys payable to the co. Subsequently the bill of sale holder demanded the furniture from the co. The co. refused to deliver up the furniture, claiming a lien for its charges. In an action for detinue in the District Ct., the claim to a lien was disallowed & a verdict returned against the co., which appealed:—Held: (1) the contract was not a contract of common carriage but a composite special agreement to carry & store the furniture & no common carrier's lien attached for the carrying charges; (2) the co. could not maintain any claim to a special lien or contractual lien for the removal & storage charges since the bill of sale holder had not expressly authorised the removal & storage, & no implied authority arose from the fact that the grantor of the bill of sale had been left in the possession of the furniture.—KILNERS, LTD. v. H.) MOTOR CO., LTD. v. SEKAWITCH, [1931] 3 W. W. R. 521.—CAN.

PART IV. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—B. (a).

315 1. General rule.]—An artificer's lien arises only when the work in respect of which the charges arose has been done by the order or at the request of the owner or of some person authorised by him.—FISHER v. AUTOMOBILE FINANCE CO. OF AUSTRALIA, LTD. (1928), 41 C. L. R. 167.—AUS.

322a 1. Order given by hire-purchaser—No authority to create lien.]—Held: the vendor was entitled to a return of the subject-matter of the agreement without payment of the cost of repairs in full. He then fell into arrear, but defts. allowed him to take the cabs out daily to ply for hire on condition that the cabs continued "in pawn" & were returned to the garage each night. Defts.' weekly accounts then debited B. with the amounts in arrear brought forward; credited the amount paid by B., which was sometimes a lump sum & sometimes the exact amount of the current week's bill; & carried forward the balance. B. then fell into arrear with his hire-purchase instalments, & plffs. terminated the agreements & demanded the three cabs from defts., who claimed a lien for £113 18s. 3d. the balance of their general account for all five cabs due from B., but they also gave plffs. full details of the charges for each of their three cabs. Plffs., relying on their agreements, made no tender to defts., but commenced this action for detinue. Defts. then sought to appropriate the total sum received from B. to items for which they had no lien against plffs., & to appropriate the balance to plffs.' three cabs, leaving £94 11s. 1d. unpaid, for which they claimed a lien as against the £113 18s. 3d. originally claimed:—Held: (1) a contractual limitation of authority not communicated to the repairer did not limit the implied authority derived from the hirer being allowed to possess & use the car, & defts. were entitled to a lien in respect of repairs executed by them; (2) the conditional agreement between B. & defts. that the cabs might be taken out daily to ply for hire, did not prevent the repairer's lien from continuing; (3) defts. had not in the circumstances lost their lien by demanding too large a sum at first, or by basing it partly on the wrong ground; that their attempted appropriations were too late; & that there must be an inquiry how much of the amount of the lien they claimed represented items for repairs to the three cabs.

A person claiming a lien must either claim it for a definite amount or give the owner particulars from which he himself can calculate the amount for which a lien is due. The owner must then, in the absence of express agreement, tender an amount covering the lien really existing. If he does not, unless excused, he has no answer to a claim of lien. He may be excused from tendering (a) if he has no knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the right amount; or (b) if the person claiming the lien for a wrong cause or amount makes it clear that he will not release the goods unless his full claim is satisfied, & that claim is wrongful. The fact that the claim is made for more than the right amount does not matter unless the claimant gives no particulars from which the right amount can be calculated, or makes it clear that he insists on the full amount of the right claimed (per cur.).—*ALBEMARLE SUPPLY CO., LTD. v. 322a iv. ———.—Where an agreement for the conditional sale of a motor car contained the following clause: "We shall not at any time (that is, the buyer) suffer or permit any charge or lien whether possessory or otherwise to exist against said automobile," it was held that this clause negated the idea that the buyer could authorise the doing of repairs in such a way as to give the repairer a lien.—ALLIANCE FINANCE CO. & STANDARD MOTORS, LTD. v. SIMONS, [1928] 3 W. W. R. 621.—CAN.

322a v. ———.—An artificer's lien arises only when the work in respect of which the charges arose was done by the order or at the request of the owner or some person authorised by him. Where the owner of a motor car let it to another under a hire-purchase agreement, which provided that repairs to the car should be made by the owner's nominee only, & the hirer caused the car to be repaired by a person who was not the owner's nominee:—Held: the person who repaired the car was not entitled to a lien for his charges as against the owner.—FISHER v. AUTOMOBILE FINANCE CO. OF AUSTRALIA, LTD., [1928] A. L. R. 363; [1928] V. L. R. 946.—AUS.

322a vi. ———.—Def. sold an auto-truck, taking a lien agreement to secure the balance of the purchase price, which was duly registered. The owner having an accident, brought the truck to plff., who made extensive repairs, & held the truck for the cost of the repairs. On the truck being taken for trial by an ostensible buyer, after the owner was in default under the lien agreement, it was seized by deft.'s bailiff under the lien agreement. In an action to recover the truck it was held that plff. was entitled to hold the car subject to his lien:—Held: where the vendor had not taken possession & where there had been no default up to the time of repair, the purchaser had the right & duty to have the property repaired so as to give rise to a common law lien in favour of the person who did the work.—GUREVITCH v. MELCHOR (1921), 29 B. C. R. 394.—CAN.

322a vii. ———.—Acquiescence of vendor.—A motor car sold under a conditional sale agreement & lent by the buyer to a friend for his temporary use was damaged while in the latter's possession & left by him with a mechanic to be repaired. The agent of plff., the vendor's assignee, saw the car in the mechanic's garage while it was yet unrepaired & without questioning the authority of the borrower of the car to order the repairs, which were obviously necessary suffered it to remain there, merely asking the mechanic what the repairs would cost & how long it would take to make them, & requesting him to send in an account of his charges against the car:—Held: the agent had so conducted himself as to justify the mechanic in concluding that plff. expected him to make the repairs, & therefore, whatever was the extent of the borrower's authority to order them, plff. could not be heard to say that the mechanic had no authority to make them; & the mechanic was, therefore, entitled to a lien for the repairs.—*STERLING SECURITIES CORPN., LTD. v. f ii. — By assignee of lien.—Pltf.'s grain on his farm was seized by defts., purporting to be assignees of C., who had threshed the grain for pltf. & who was, as defts. alleged, entitled to a lien on the grain under Threshers' Lien Ordinance. At the time of the seizure only $38.89 was owing by pltf. to C., & that sum was, by agreement between pltf. & C., not then payable. The alleged assignment to defts. was after this agreement. It was a general assignment of all earnings of a threshing machine used by C. in threshing pltf.'s grain:—Held: defts. had no legal right to make the entry & seizure; & defts.' seizure being for $160, it was, at all events, for an excessive amount, & illegal.—*SEMPLE v. He finished the other threshing in Oct., but, except for a few hours on Dec. 21, he failed to thresh for pltf. until May. Damages were held recoverable by pltf., as being fairly supposed to have been in contemplation of the parties, on several heads. When deflt. finished threshing in May he seized under the Threshing Lien Act:—Held: as pltf.'s existing claims, being for damages as above & a claim for teams supplied which should have been supplied by deflt., were not in the nature of payment made on account of threshing, but in the nature of counterclaim, the seizure was lawful & pltf. could not claim damages for conversion.—*FINLAYSON v. f vi. — What amounts to.—So long as a document establishes, even though it be a mere acknowledgment, that the owner of grain had notice within the prescribed time of a threshers' intention to exercise the power given him by sect. 3 of Threshers' Lien Act, R.S.S., 1930, it is a sufficient notice with said section.—*ADVANCE-RUMELY THRESHER CO. v. f viii. ——Threshers' Lien Act, R. S. M., 1913, does not give a lien for the hauling of the grain to an elevator or to market. A threshers with a valid lien for threshing loses that lien when in exercising it he combines with it a claim, e.g., one for hauling, for which no lien is given him. f ix. Thresher employee's lien—On earnings of employer—Nature & extent of.—The "claim" which Thresher Employees Act, R. S. S. 1920, c. 209, s. 3, gives to a person employed on or about a threshing machine is not a mere right to make a demand but an actual charge on the earnings of the machine, which takes effect as soon as the wages are earned. The claim is restricted, however, to the amount of wages earned with respect to threshing done for the particular person in whose hands are the earnings against which the claim is asserted.—*STEEDSMAN v. Pltf. claimed liens against deft., the owner of the building, for work or service & for material used in erecting a track for a six-day bicycle race in a building used as a skating & hockey rink & sports arena. The track was built for the purposes of holding said race under a six-day lease of the building entered into between deft. & a cycle-race assoc. co. whereunder the co. was allowed two days before the race & two days thereafter for erecting & removing the track. ooo (p. 274) iv. —.]—Mechanics' Lien Act, R. S. O., 1927, s. 5, gives to one who erects a building a lien on the owner's estate or interest in the "building & appurtenances & the land occupied thereby or enjoyed therewith." It is a question of fact in each case what land this includes, to be determined from all the circumstances. The fact that an owner has acquired land in one connected parcel by a single conveyance & has included it all in one or more mtgs. does not necessarily imply that those entitled to liens in connection with a building erected on a part of it are entitled to place their liens on the whole parcel. In the case in question it was held that the land to be enjoyed with the building erected for the owner had been severed from the rest of the property by the owner & leased, to be occupied & enjoyed by the lessee, separate from the rest of the owner's property, & this leased land, & including, with regard to the lien, one-half of the wall of an adjoining building, which wall was used as a wall of the new building, was the only land upon which the lien was acquired, & therefore the claim of lien, which was filed against it only, was properly so confined, the contention of applt., second mtgee. of all the land & purchaser thereof at a sale made under power of sale in the first mtge., that the lien should have been filed against all the land, being rejected.—STEEDMAN v. SPARKS & MCKAY & LORD, STEEDMAN v. DOMINION LUMBER & COAL CO., LTD. & LORD, [1930] S. C. R. 351; 3 D. L. R. 185; varg., [1929] 2 D. L. R. 32; 63 O. L. R. 393.—CAN.

nnnn iv. —.]—Unpatented lands.—Under Mechanics' Lien Act, 1930, there may be a valid lien against an interest in unpatented lands, although, since in such a case there is no certificate of title a "registration" of the lien within the strict meaning of that term in Land Titles Act is impossible.—UNION DRILLING & DEVELOPMENT CO., LTD. v. CAPITAL OIL & NATURAL GAS CO., LTD., [1931] 3 D. L. R. 656; affd., [1931] 2 D. L. R. 851; 2 W. W. R. 508; affd., [1931] 1 W. W. R. 786.—CAN.

nnnn v. —.]—Interest without value.—Pltf. registered a mechanics' lien in 1921 "upon the estate of" deft. Z. in certain land & the house thereon. Z. had purchased the land under an agreement for sale in 1920, & had bought the materials covered by the lien without the cognisance of the vendor of the land. Z. fell into arrears in respect of interest & taxes & in 1926 the vendor agreed to cancel the agreement on certain terms. In pursuance of the agreement for cancellation deft. delivered to Z. all of the latter's notes which deft. held, & Z. gave deft. a quit-claim deed of all his estate & interest in the land, & gave up possession of the land. In an action to enforce the lien, judgment was given for pltf. declaring the lien to be a first charge on the land. On appeal: Held: on the evidence, the interest of Z. in the land was of no value; the settlement made by the vendor, including the return of the notes, was made for the purpose of enabling him to obtain possession. There was, therefore, nothing against which the lien could be charged.—DEWEY-GARDNER CO., LTD. v. ZACHORECKY & MOORHOUSE & MOORHOUSE, [1936] 2 W. W. R. 423.—CAN.

H. obtained a decree of specific performance of the exchange agreement from the California Ct. & it was not until it was carried out that he received an assignment of the MacF. agreement or a transfer of the property. In the meantime, while said action was pending H. got the liens against the California land released on giving ptfrs. herein an assignment of the MacF. agreement in trust for the lien creditors. Later when H. & L. carried out the exchange agreement H. assigned to L. two specific amounts of interest due under the MacF. agreement. Ptfrs. obtained a final order against MacF., as vendee, in an action for specific performance or cancellation of the agreement for sale. At the time of the order nisi it was agreed & so ordered that the issue between pliffs. & L., arising from L.'s claim of a vendor's lien for the amounts due him, be adjourned. On the trial of the issue:—Held: since the prior assignment to pliffs. also carried the vendor's lien H. had no lien to assign to L. except what equity there might be after the creditors for whom pliffs. were trustees were paid. Moreover, since L. with the knowledge that H. was using his contract with L. to satisfy the lien creditors gave an absolute assignment of the MacF. agreement to H. with no reservations, he was estopped from now asserting a reservation of a vendor's lien.—*FICKLING v. t (p. 289) ii. — As against equitable mortgage with notice. — A vendor's lien on lands sold to secure the unfulfilled obligation of the purchaser is independent of any contract between the parties, & exists whether the consideration is an annuity or a sum of money to be paid at the time of the transfer or subsequent to it. The giving of some particular & special security for the payment of the purchase money may be a complete performance of the purchaser's obligation, but the mere insertion into the conveyance of a covenant for the payment of the purchase money is not a circumstance from which an agreement for the substitution of the security of the covenant for the usual vendor's lien can be inferred. A vendor's lien will rank in priority to a subsequent equitable mtge. by deposit when the mtgee. had notice. A payment of rent by such equitable mtgee. to avoid the eviction of the lands charged ranks as a salvage claim & in priority to a vendor's lien.—*MUNSTER & LEINSTER BANK, LTD. v. from the salary or wages payable to him & to be carried to & form part of the superannuation fund. . . .” Sect. 11 defines which officers or servants of the Comrs. shall be entitled on ceasing to hold their offices or employments “to receive during life out of the superannuation fund a superannuation allowance according to the scale laid down in this Act.”

Defts. were employed by the Tees Conservancy Comrs. & were subject to the provisions of the Tees Conservancy Act, 1907, which established a contributory scheme of superannuation. From 1915 onwards, the Comrs. paid a bonus to their servants, but failed to deduct any contributions in respect of it for the fund & calculated the superannuation allowances which became payable under the Act on the basis that it was not “wages or salary.” In 1933, it was held by the Ct. of Appeal that the bonus was “wages or salary” & that the superannuation allowances must be calculated on that footing:—Held: (1) nothing in sect. 4 imposes on an employee any liability to pay contributions otherwise than by permitting the Comrs., to make deductions from his salary or wages according to the scale laid down by the Act; (2) in the case of superannuated employees, the Comrs. could not recover from them the amount of the contributions which should have been deducted in respect of bonus; (3) in the case of persons still in the employment of the Comrs. deductions of the appropriate contributions should be made in each year; but the Comrs. had no power to make further deductions in respect of any sums which should have been deducted in some other year; (4) Limitation Act, 1923 (c. 16), applied to the employees’ claim for unpaid superannuation allowance, which was thereby subject to a limitation of six years.—*TEES CONSERVANCY COMRS. v. Deft. relied on Stat. Limitations, 1923 (c. 16), which provides that actions on the case (other than for slander) must be commenced & sued on within six years, & actions of trespass to the person within four years, next after the cause of such actions:—Held: as pltf.’s cause of action would formerly have constituted an action on the case & not an action of trespass, the period of limitation applicable was six & not four years, & pltf.’s claim was maintain-

These wages were less than the minimum wages prescribed for farm workers in Sussex by the Agricultural Wages Board under Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Act, 1924 (c. 37), during that period. In June, 1935, he brought the present action claiming £39 8s. 6d., being the difference between the amount of the wages received by him from deft. under the contract & the amount of the minimum wages to which he was entitled under the Act:—Held: the action was not an action for debt upon a statute, but was one based on the contract as amended by substituting for the amount provided by the contract the amount of the minimum rate of wages provided by the statute. Therefore, the action was not on a specialty, but for a simple contract debt, & was barred by Limitation Act, 1923 (c. 16).—GUTSELL v. REEVE, [1936] 1 K. B. 272; 105 L. J. K. B. 213; 154 L. lessee under a crop-payment lease agreed to deliver in the name of the lessor one-third of the crop & in addition enough thereof to pay certain taxes. He finished delivering wheat to the lessor's credit on Oct. 9, 1923, & on that date had marketed all the remainder of the crop in his own name. The amount delivered for the lessor was not sufficient to fulfil the terms of the covenant to deliver:—Held: the breach of the agreement was committed on said date & Stat. Limitations commenced to run therefrom, & the agreement not being under seal, the period of limitation was six years.—GORDON v. RIBBOROUGH [1931] 2 W. W. R. 331.—CAN.

- 139a. — Arbitration condition precedent.—The Crown requisitioned appcts.' ship under a charterparty, which provided that any dispute under the charter should be referred to arbn. under Arbn. Act, 1889 (c. 49), & which concluded as follows: " & it is further mutually agreed that such arbn. shall be a condition precedent to the commencement of any action at law." In July, 1917, the ship was lost, but appcts. did not proceed to arbn. until Dec. 1923. The Crown contended that, as the arbn. was not commenced within six years of the loss, the claim was barred by Stat. Limitations, 1923 (c. 16):—Held: under the arbn. clause no cause of action arose until the award was made, & time did not run until the making of the award, & the claim was not barred.—*BOARD OF TRADE v. - 154a. Date of document—Bill treated as promissory note.—On Mar. 23, 1920, the branch of British Trade Corp'n., Ltd., at Batoum, drew a document in the following form: " At sight pay this sole exchange to the order of Mr. B. L. Mailoff the sum of one thousand pounds sterling value received which place to account No. 2." The document was signed " For British Trade Corp'n." by the manager & account, & it was addressed at the foot " To the British Trade Corp'n., 13 Austin Friars, London, E.C." By successive indorsements plff. became the holder, & on Dec. 20, 1923, his agents presented the document at the London offices of the Corp'n. Payment was refused, as it was required that the indorsements should have a banker's certification. On Nov. 23, 1926, a special resolution was passed for the voluntary winding up of the corp'n. in connection with an amalgamation with the Anglo-Austrian Bank, Ltd. On Apr. 6, 1931, plff. sought to prove in the winding up for £1,000 in respect of the document, but the liquidator rejected the proof on the ground that it was barred by the Statute of Limitations, as more than six years had elapsed since the date of the document before the winding-up resolution.

An exor. is not virtute officii an express trustee within Limitation of Actions Act, 1931, s. 34.—HEUBACH v.

The holder took out a summons claiming to have his proof admitted & he elected to treat the document as a promissory note:—Held: the document when treated as a promissory note did not need to be presented for payment in order to render the maker liable, because, in order that a place of payment should be specified "in the body" of the note within Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 87 (1), it must be embodied in the actual terms of the contract for payment. Time therefore began to run under Stat. Limitations, as from date of the document, & it was barred before the date of winding-up resolution.—Re BRITISH TRADE CORPN., LTD., [1932] 2 Ch. 1; 101 L. J. After an order for the compulsory winding up of the co. the applicant put in a proof for £950 in respect of creditors' fees. The liquidator rejected the proof to the extent of £350, allowing only £600 on the ground that all directors' fees which had accrued due more than six years before the date of the winding-up order were barred by Stat. Limitations. The director's fees due to appct. appeared from balance sheets duly signed by two directors & passed by the co. Upon a summons taken out by the applicant asking that the decision of the liquidator rejecting his proof to the extent of £350, might be reversed, & that the proof might be allowed in the full sum of £950:—Held: (1) a board of directors, acting as a board, & passing a resolution adopting a balance sheet which includes directors' fees, does not bind the co. to pay those fees; (2) a balance sheet so adopted & signed by directors pursuant to Cos. (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c. 69), s. 113, is not a written promise by the co. or its agents to pay the directors' fees.—Re COLISEUM (BARROW), LTD., [1930] 2

In respect of these an action was commenced on Oct. 10, 1935. Pltf. relied upon an acknowledgment contained in a letter written on Oct. 31, 1929, which included the following: "I am sorry I cannot agree with L.'s inference that money was loaned to A. or to me. The cash I received from you was to enable me to accept the partnership arrangement in the farming venture & as you doubtless remember you arbitrarily dissolved the partnership. Any money I received from you was for expenses incurred on the trip. Your father, against my inclination, insisted on discussing the question & in definite terms advised me not to consider repayment. I told him that I regarded it as an obligation, & as soon as I was able to dispose of it I would do so. I am still of the same mind. As you probably realise I have only just returned to business & am, therefore, not in a position to make any definite promises. You may be assured that immediately I am able to, I shall commence reducing my obligation & I propose adding simple interest at 5 per cent. per annum until the whole amount is disposed of. I shall be glad to know that this is agreeable to you. I would like you to understand that this is entirely my affair & any money accruing to A. under her father's will, will not be accepted by me to benefit my financial position or obligation":—Held: this letter was not an acknowledgment of the debt. It was a mere admission of partnership agreement, under which there might be something due to pltf. The letter contained no promise to pay.—WARD v. TIBBATS, [1936] 2 All E. R. 656; 80 Sol.
